THE EUROPEAN WAR.

ARRIVAL OF THE ANGLO-SAXON.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

GREAT BATTLE IN LOMBARDY.

Utter Rout of the Austrians at Magenta.

Twenty-Seven Thousand of their Number Killed, Wounded and Prisoners.

THE ALLIES LOSE 3,000 MEN.

INSURRECTION IN MILAN.

The Austrians Evacuate that City.

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

Cotton and Breadstuffs Declining —Provisions Dull.

CONSOLS 93 1-2@93 3-4.

The steamship Anglo-Saxon, Capt. BORLAND, from Liverpool, on Wednesday, the 8th inst., passed Further Point at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning, on her way to Quebec.

The news is of the highest importance.

The steamship Adelaide, from New-York viâ St. Johns, N. F., arrived at Galway on the morning of the 8th.

The great battle of the campaign occurred at Margenta, near Milan, in which the French claim a decisive victory, giving the loss of the Austrians at 20,000 hors du combat.

The French loss is reported as high as 12,000 men.

The Austrians had evacuated Milan.

The Queen of England had delivered her speech to Parliament. The document possesses no important points.

A motion of want of confidence in the Ministry was pending in the House of Commons.

The Paris Bourse was active and prices higher, the Rentes closing at 63f. 30c.

Consols had advanced, the closing price being 93⅛ @93¾ for money and account.

There was but little inquiry for cotton in the Liverpool market, and prices were weak, while in many cases a decline of ⅛d. was quoted. The sales of the three days were 17,000 bales.

In the Liverpool breadstuffs market prices of all descriptions of breadstuffs were slightly lower as compared with the rates quoted per Europa.

The Liverpool provision market was dull.

The Bombay mail of the 20th of May had arrived, but the news was not of much importance. A great monetary panic had prevailed.

THE BATTLE AT MAGENTA.

Retreat of the Austrians Across the Ticino—The Allies Pass that River—Conflict of the Two Armies—Gen. Espinasse Killed—Marshal Canrobert Mortally Wounded—Marshal Baraguay d'Hilliers Superseded —The Forces Engaged.

The latest news by the Europa, reporting the Austrians in retreat across the Ticino, is fully confirmed.

The French crossed the Ticino at Buffalora and Turbigo. There was considerable fighting at both places.

On the 4th inst. a great battle took place at Magenta, twelve miles from Milan.

NAPOLEON'S dispatches claim a decisive victory, and Paris was illuminated. He says that they took 7,000 Austrian prisoners, and placed 12,000 more hors de combat, besides capturing three cannon and two standards.

The French loss is stated by the Emperor at 3,000 men.

The Austrians took one cannon.

The French General ESPINASSE was killed, and Marshal CANROBERT was mortally wounded.

Five French marshals and generals were wounded.

General MCMAHON was made a Marshal of France and Duke of Magenta.

General BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS had been superseded in his command by General FOREY.

Milan was insurgent, and had declared in favor of the King of Sardinia.

The Austrians had retired from Milan, but the French had not occupied it.

Rumors prevalent at Paris represent the French loss at Magenta at from 9,000 to 12,000 men.

The forces engaged are reported as 150,000 to 160,000 Austrians, and 100,000 to 130,000 French.

The Austrian accounts speaks of a "series of battles with varying success on both sides, but still undecided up to the night of the 6th,'with great losses on both sides.'

The Austrians admit that they had four generals and five staff officers wounded.

It was reported that General HESS commanded the Austrians, and also that the Emperor NAPOLEON partially commanded the French.

The latest rumors detracted from the alleged French victory.'

It was believed that proposals for peace would be made if the French entered Milan.

TELEGRAPHIC DETAILS OF THE BATTLE.

The following is the first announcement of the great battle fought on the 4th, by telegraph from NAPOLEON to the Empress:

NOVARA, Saturday, June 4—11:30 P. M.

A great victory has been won at the bridge of Magenta. Five thousand prisoners have been taken. Fifteen thousand of the enemy are killed or wounded. The details will be dispatched by telegraph.

The above was published in Paris on Sunday the 5th, and on the evening of that day the cannon at the Hotel des Invalides announced the victory and the city was brilliantly illuminated.

On the following day (Monday) the Moniteur published the following dispatches from the Emperor to the Empress:

MAGENTA, Sunday, June 5.

Yesterday our army was under orders to march on Milan, across the bridges thrown over the Ticino at Turbigo. The operation was well executed, although the enemy, who had repassed the Ticino in great force, offered a most determined resistance. The roadway was narrow, and during two hours, the Imperial Guard sustained, unsupported, the shock of the enemy. In the meantime, General MCMAHON made himself master of Magenta. After sanguinary conflicts, we repulsed the enemy at every point, with a loss on our side of about 2,000 men. The loss of the enemy is estimated at 15,000 killed and wounded, and 5,000 Austrian prisoners remained in our hands.

MAGENTA, Sunday, June 5—Evening.

The Austrians taken prisoners are at least 7,000, and the Austrians placed hors du combat are 20,000. Three pieces of cannon and two flags were captured from the enemy.

To-day our army rests for the purpose of reorganizing itself. Our loss is about 3,000 killed and wounded, and one cannon taken by the enemy.

The following dispatch, also from the Emperor to the Empress, was received on the 6th, and bulletined at the Bourse:

HEAD-QUARTERS, Monday—8 A. M.

Milan is insurgent. The Austrians have evacuated the town and castle, leaving, in their precipitation, the cannon and treasure of the army behind them. We are incumbered with prisoners, and have taken 12,000 Austrian muskets.

A dispatch dated Paris, Monday night, to the London Post, says: "The municipality of Milan proclaims VICTOR EMANUEL, and have presented an address to him in the presence of the Emperor. To-morrow the King will make his entry into Milan."

The following are Austrian accounts by way of Vienna. The information is meagre and unsatisfactory:

The official Austrian Correspondence of Sunday, the 5th, contained the following authentic communication:

"The details and the result of the battle at Magenta are still expected from the Austrian headquarters; the Austrian army had been transferred during the night from the 4th to the 5th instant to Abbiate Grasso. The same news states that the combat was undecided, and that a further fight was expected on the next day.

The following official bulletin was issued:

VIENNA, Monday, June 6—11:30 A. M.

A desperate combat took place on Saturday between the first and third, Count CLAMS' and Prince LICHTENSTEIN'S, corps d'armée, and the enemy, who had passed the Ticino in very considerable force. The result of the contest was undecided. The combat was continued on Sunday.

Our troops threw themselves upon the enemy's ranks with ardor, and showed a valor and perseverance worthy of the most glorious feats of arms of the Imperial army. Milan is perfectly tranquil. The head-quarters yesterday were still at Abbiate Grasso.

An Austrian telegram from Verona gives a similar view, but adds that the authorities and weak garrison of Milan, with the exception of the castle garrison, have withdrawn at the command of General GYULAI. The town is quiet.

The following message from Vienna has been published by the Frankfort papers, without any guarantee as to the authenticity of the news:

VIENNA, Monday.—Through the opportune arrival of the corps de armée of Field-Marshal CLAM-GALLAS on the battle-field, the Austrians were victorious after a hot fight, and the French were thrown back over the Ticino.

LONDON, Wednesday, June 8.

The Times this morning publishes a summary of the official news received at Vienna up to midnight of Monday. It is as follows:

"There was a fierce battle at Turbigo and Buffalora on the 4th. At first only two brigades of the First Corps were engaged, but they were subsequently reinforced, and in the afternoon of the same day the Third Austrian Corps took part in the action. There was very hard fighting at Buffalora, sometimes to the advantage of the French, and sometimes to that of the Austrians. The battle lasted till late in the night, and on the 5th was continued at Magenta. The Austrian corps were engaged, and in the afternoon the Austrians took up a flank position between Abbiate Grasso and Binasco. The Austrians have taken many prisoners. The loss on both sides was very great. The Austrians had four generals and five staff officers wounded. One major was killed."

RUMORS FROM CORRESPONDENTS AND THE PRESS.

The Times in its editorial remarks on the subject says, it now seems probable that this hard fight is even yet undecided, but that on the whole the French have the best of it.

The absence of late telegrams by way of Paris is not considered indicative of French success.

The London Advertiser says it was rumored last night that the Government had received a telegram from the British Minister at Vienna, announcing an Austrian victory.

The opinion was becoming current in London that the victory of Magenta was a victory in which the French were defeated, and their failure to occupy Milan, only twelve miles from Magenta, strengthened this view.

The movement which preceded the battle at Megenta was not clearly stated, but it was previously announced that the Allies were about to cross the Ticino to the number of about 100,000 men, and itis presumed the rapid movement of the allied army prevented the Austrians from completing the retreat which they had commenced, and compelled them to accept battle on the banks of the river.

The London Post says that General MCMAHON was raised on the battle-field to the rank of Marshal.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post, says the Emperor NAPOLEN was present at the battle of Magenta, but did not command in person.

There is a report that General CANROBERT was mortally wounded, and that five French Marshals or Generals were wounded.

The Patrie says that Marshal BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS was removed from his command and replaced by Gen. FOREY. Marshal VAILLANT is superseded by Gen. RANDON, and the Ministry of War is to be confided provisionally to Gen. HORANNA.(?)

There were rumors in Paris on the 8th that the French loss was from 9,000 to 12,000 men hors du combat. Generals NEIL and MCMAHON were said to be among the wounded.

The Paris papers variously estimate the forces engaged at 100,000 to 120,000 French, and 130,000 to 180,000 Austrians.

General GARIBALDI had quitted Lecco, and General D'URBAN had retreated to Monza. It was supposed that GARIBALDI was directing his march against D'URBAN.

The Paris correspondent of the London Post telegraphs that General MCMAHON has been created Duke of Magenta.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The real business of Parliament commenced on the 7th, when the Queen in person delivered the following speech:

My Lords and Gentlemen:—I avail myself with satisfaction, in the present anxious state of public affairs, of the advice of my Parliament, which I have summoned to meet with the least possible delay.

I have directed that papers shall be laid before you from which you will learn how earnest and unceasing have been my endeavors for the peace of Europe. Those efforts have unhappily failed, and war has been declared between France and Sardinia on one side, and Austria on the other. Receiving the assurance of friendship from both the contending parties, I intend to maintain between them a strict and impartial neutrality, and I hope with God's assistance to preserve to my people the blessing of continued peace.

Considering, however, the present state of Europe I have deemed it necessary to the security of my dominions and the honor of my Crown to increase my naval forces to an amount exceeding that which has been sanctioned by Parliament. I rely with confidence on your cordial concurrence in this precautionary measure of defensive policy.

The King of the Two Sicilies having announced to me the death of the King, his father, and his own accession, I have thought, in concert with the Emperor of France, to renew my diplomatic intercourse with the Court of Naples, which had been suspended during the late reign.

All my other arrangements continue on a perfectly satisfactory footing.

The rest of the speech is devoted to matters o local interest. Attention is directed to the bill to carry out the recommendation of the Commissioner in regard to the best mode of manning the Navy. And in respect to the Reform question, the Queen simply says that she shall have pleasure in giving her sanction to any well-considered measure, and that should matters of more urgency relating to the defence and financial condition of the country necessitate a postponement, she hopes that the question will have attention at the commencement of the session.

The speech concludes by expressing a hope that the deliberations of Parliament will tend to secure to the country the continuance of peace abroad and a progressive improvement at home.

In the House of Lords, the address in reply to the Queen's speech was moved by Earl POWIS, and seconded by Lord GIFFORD. The conduct of the Government, both in their domestic and foreign relations, was denounced by Lord GRANVILLE and others, but after their speeches in defence by the Earl of MALMESBURY and the Earl of DERBY, the address was agreed to.

In the Commons, the address to the Crown was moved by Mr. EGERTON, and seconded by Sir J. EMPSTONE. The Marquis of HARTINGTON moved an amendment, to the effect that the present Ministry does not possess the confidence of the House. He reprehended the conduct of the Government on the Reform question. Mr. HANBURY seconded the amendment. Mr. DISRAELI defended the course of the Government, and stated that the Reform question would be postponed till the next session, and that the foreign policy of the Government would be peace. He called for an immediate division. The question was about to be put, but the Opposition were not prepared to vote, and, after speeches by Lord PALMERSTON and others, Mr. DISRAELI consented to adjourn the debate till the 11th.

A conference of the Liberal Party was held in London on the 6th, in the street, pursuant to a call issued by Lords PALMERSTON and JOHN RUSSELL and other prominent men. Upwards of two hundred and fifty members of Parliament are stated to have been present, and the proceedings were, on the whole, harmonious.

KOSSUTH was leaving England for Italy on the 7th inst. He had had an interview with the French Ambassador in London. Some three hundred Hungarians who had returned from America were to follow him to Italy.

It was announced that Prince PAUL ESTERHAZY had arrived in London on a diplomatic mission from Austria, but the Herald states authoritatively that the re, port is entirely without foundation.

Sir ARTHUR MAGINNIS, at present British Minister to Sweden, is appointed Envoy to Naples, thus reopening diplomatic relations with that Kingdom.

The sudden death of Mr. PIERCE, a leading member of Christy's Minstrels, now performing in London, is announced.

The Dublin correspondent of the London Herald mentions a rumor that Sir EDWARD GROGAN is to succeed Sir E. HEAD, as Governor-General of Canada.

FRANCE.

Confidence was somewhat restored in commercia-circles, and business was more animated.

The Paris Flour market was firm and rather dearer. Wheat was also firm. It was feared that the prevailing wet weather would damage the crops.

The Paris Bourse was buoyant and higher. The quotation for Three per Cents on the 6th was 64f. 30c. an advance of more than one per cent. since the Europa sailed. On the 7th, the closing price was 63f. 30c. ex coupon, which is equal to a further advance of one half.

AUSTRIA.

On the 4th a great religious solemnity, with processions and public prayers, took place at Vienna the object being to implore Heaven to bless the Austrian arms with victory. All the members of the Imperial family, and the Ministers, were present. Mass was read by the Pope's Nuncio.

RUSSIA.

An important circular from Prince GORTSCHAKOFF, to the Envoys of Russia at the several Courts of Germany, declares that if Germany goes to the aid of Austria, the political equilibrium, resulting from the treaties by which the German confederation is constituted, will be destroyed.

GERMANY.

A dispatch from Darmstadt says that at the opening of the Chambers there the Presidents of both branches of the Legislature declared in favor of war against LOUIS NAPOLEON.

INDIA.

The Bombay Mail of May 12 had reached England. The news is of little importance. The Money Market had experienced a sudden and unprecedented panic. Discount was nominally ruling at 24 per cent. in the Bazaar, but money in any quantity was not obtainable upon any terms. The import market was depressed by the monetary crisis. Cotton had declined from the same cause, and Exchange had materially advanced. Quotations ranged from 2s. 2¾d.@ 2s. 2½d. Freights about the same.

The vessels engaged in laying down the Red Sea Telegraph Cable were within 300 miles of Aden, and the working of the line was most satisfactory.

AUSTRALIA.

The Melbourne Mail of April 16th had reached England. The news is of no importance. The gold shipments, since the departure of the previous mail, reached nearly £1,000,000.

Commercial Intelligence.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

The sales of the three days in the Liverpool Cotton market were 17,000 bales, including 2,000 on speculation and for export. The market closed with but little inquiry and prices weak, while some authorities say that in many cases a reduction of ⅛d. had been submitted to. Messrs. CLARE & SONS quote: Middling Orleans 6 13-16d., and Middling Upland 6 9-16d.

STATE OF TRADE.—The advices from Manchester are unfavorable; the market was dull, the East Indian demand having subsided.

LIVERPOOL BREADSTUFFS MARKET.

In the Liverpool BREADSTUFFS market all descriptions were slightly lower. Messrs. RICHARDSON, SPENCE & Co. quote American FLOUR very dull and unsalable, and quotations nominal at 11s.@13s. 9d. WHEAT declined 2d.@3d.: Western, 8s.@10s.; Western White, 10s.@11s.; White Southern, 10s. 6d @13s. CORN had a downward tendency, and holders were pressing on the market at a reduction for European; American sorts were quoted: Mixed, 6s. 6d.@6s. 8d.; Yellow, 6s. 8d.@6s. 10d.; White, 8s.@8s. 6d.

LIVERPOOL PROVISION MARKET.

The Liverpool Provision market was dull, and prices weak. BEEF was heavy, and all qualities slightly lower. PORK dull, and sales unimportant. BACON quiet. LARD dull, and slightly lower. TALLOW steadier; Butchers' Association 56s.@56s. 6d.

LIVERPOOL PRODUCE MARKET.

Messrs. RICHARDSON, SPENCE & Co. quote RESIN dull at 4s. 1d. for common. SUGAR firm and 6d. higher. COFFEE quiet. ASHES dull and nominal. SPIRITS TURPENTINE dull but steady.

LONDON MARKETS.

BREADSTUFFS were dull but steady in London. SUGAR was firm at an advance of 6d.@11s. COFFEE firm at a slight advance. TEA firm. RICE heavy, and previous quotations barely maintained. TALLOW firm at 55s. 3d.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.

CONSOLS closed on the 7th at 93⅛ for money and 93⅜ @93¾ for account.

AMERICAN SECURITIES.

American Stocks were slow of sale, but without alteration of moment in rates.

A PARALLEL.—The Paris correspondent of the London Globe writes: At the last struggle between Austria and France, half a century ago, the names of the dramatis personæ, who performed on the European boards, tally so wonderfully with the corps dramatique displayed to public view when the curtain rose again on the revival of the same play this month, 1859, that the bill of the entertainment needs no alteration:

DRAM. PERS., 1810.	DRAM. PERS., 1859.
Alexander I., Czar,	Alexander II.
Fred. Wm. I., King of Prussia,	Fred. Wm. II.
Franz I., Kaiser,	Franz Jos. II.
Pius VI., Pope,	Pius IX.
Napoleon I., Protagonista,	Napoleon III.
V. Emanuel I., Savoyard,	Vict. Eman.
Ferdinand I., Lazzarone,	Ferdinand II.
George IV., first gentleman in Europe,	George V., acting at Hanover.

VIVAT VICTORIA REGINA!

THE BATTLE OF MAGENTA.

Its Heroes and its Victims.

Among the illustrious victims of the late important battle in Lombardy, the name of the Marshal commanding the third corps d'armée of the allied army deserves signal notice.

MARSHAL CANROBERT.

FRANCOIS CERTAIN CANROBERT was a native of the ancient and war-like province of Brittany where he was born of a good old family in 1809 Educated at the military school of St. Cyr, he left that institution with the rank of a sub-Lieutenant of one of the regiments of the line, and in 1832 was advanced to a Lieutenancy. In 1835 he embarked for Algeria, where he was present at all the important actions of the war, earning promotion to the grade of Captain. At the siege of Constantine he led the assault at one of the breaches, by the side of Colonel COMBES, and so distinguished himself by his gallantry, that his commanding officer, who fell mortally wounded in the action recommended him to Marshal VALLEE, as a young man "whose future was assured." Decorated with the cross of the Legion d'Honneur, he returned to France in 1839. Returning in 1841, after a short repose, to Africa, he continued to serve with the highest credit in the protracted wars and insurrections by which the army of France has been educated. In 1849, as Colonel of the Third Zouaves, he was first in the assault at Zaatcha, immortalized by the pencil of VERNET, and by his splendid courage and skill obtained the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honor. CANROBERT had just returned from Africa when the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, took place. It was understood, at the time, that in lending himself to the support of LOUIS NAPOLEON he meant to secure some vantage from which, at a proper time, he might act against the President, and that vantage he obtained in the appointment of Commander of Paris under the new régime, with promotion to the rank of General of Brigade. But he was conspicuous in repressing the insurrections of December, 1851, and eventually gave himself to the new order of things with devotion. In return for this, he was named General of Division in 1853. When the war with Russia broke out, Gen. CANROBERT, in March, took command of the First Division of the Army of the East, which was so frightfully decimated by cholera in the disastrous campaign of the Dobrutscha. Subsequently, he played a leading part in the campaign of the Crimea, sustaining at the battle of the Alma the first shock of the Russian attack, and storming the heights with the Zouaves, until Gen. FOREY came up to his support. Although badly wounded in the arm, he remained on the field until the close of the day. Two days after that victory, Marshal ST. ARNAUD, perceiving his death approaching, resigned the chief command of the allied armies into the hands of Gen. CANROBERT, in conformity with secret instructions received from the Emperor, March 12, 1854. General CANROBERT commanded at Inkermann, opened the lines before Sebastopol, and was proceeding rapidly toward the capture of the city, when the refusal or jealous hesitation of Lord RAGLAN to cooperate heartily with his ally, disgusted him with his position, and he suddenly resigned it into the hands of General PELISSIER, gracefully resuming his subordinate command of the first corps d'armée. Two months afterwards he returned to France, and there, on the 16th of May, 1856, he received, simultaneously with Generals BOSQUET and RANDON, the baton of Marshal of France. The position of Senator was an incident of this office. At the outset of the present war, Marshal CANROBERT was assigned the command of the Military Division of Lyons, but when the threatening manifestations of Germany made it necessary for the Emperor to put the Duke DE MALAKOFF in that position, Marshal CANROBERT accepted the command of the third corps d'armée, and in that capacity was with the army which crossed the Ticino in pursuit of the retreating Austrians, and fell mortally wounded at the great battle and victory of Magenta.

GENERAL ESPINASSE.

ESPRIT-CHARLES-MARIE ESPINASSE, like CANROBERT, was a graduate of the school of St. Cyr. Born in the village of Saissac, April 2, 1815, during the "Hundred Days." He left the school in 1833, and won his first steps in Algeria. As Chef de Bataillon he fought in 1845 at the head of the Zouaves; and in 1849 commanded the Forty-second of the Line at the siege of Rome. He was most active in suppressing the insurrections of December, 1851, and devoted himself to the cause of the President and of public order. Immediately on the proclamation of the Empire, he became an aide-de-camp of the Emperor. In the Crimea he fought gallantly by the side of the Sardinians at Tchernaya, and was one of the first to follow General MACMAHON into the Malakoff. When Paris was shocked and excited by the Orsini affair in January, 1858, General ESPINASSE was made Minister of Public Safety in the place of M. BILLAULT. Although this disappointment caused much alarm and concern as an invasion of the civil service by a military man, General ESPINASSE administered his office with commendable moderation; and when he made way for a more liberal system in the person of M. DELANGLE became a Senator of the Empire. He served in Italy as a General of Division in the second corps d' armée under the orders of General, now Marshal MACMAHON.

THE NEW DUKE DE MAGENTA.

NAPOLEON III. has been sparing in the creation of nobles. In nothing has he shown his intrinsic good sense and his knowledge of the French people more strikingly than in this forbearance. Weak men like JAMES I. of England, their heads turned by a sudden accession of sovereign power, constantly betray themselves by calling into existence a crowd of titular aristocrats and tinselled dignitaries, who provoke envy without inspiring either respect or emulation. The French Emperor has reserved his titles for men already conspicuous in the public eye; and by linking his new nobility with marked public interests, or brilliant moments in the national history, gives their decorations and trappings a solid value in the commonwealth. In the seven years of his reign he has created but two dukes, and revived two ducal titles of the first Empire. The Duke of MALAKOFF has carried his name as almost a literal "tower of strength" to the great army which has been assembled in Eastern France, to assist Prussia in keeping down the riotous Anti-Gallican enthusiasm of the South Germans. The Duke of MAGENTA will now march with the liberating armies through Lombardy, as a living incarnation of their first colossal strife, and their first great victory.

MARIE-EDME-PATRICK-MAURICE DE MAC-MAHON is a scion of one of those illustrious Irish families which followed the STUARTS into exile two centuries ago, and have since given so many brave and brilliant names to the history of France, Austria and Spain. The gallantry of the SARSFIELDS and the TYRCONNELS has not faded out of this ancient blood with the lapse of time; and the valor of the Irish Brigade which broke the English squares at Fontenoy lives in the stormer of the Malakoff and the leader of the desperate battle at Magenta.

The father of Marshal MCMAHON was a Peer of France under the Restoration, having been as loyal to the Bourbons as his ancestors had been to the STUARTS; and a personal friend of CHARLES X of France. The son, born in 1807, entered that nursery of heroes, the school of St. Cyr, in 1825 and fought in Algiers with the first French army of invasion. Returning to France in the suite of General ACHARD, he marched with the Duc D'ORLEANS to the siege of Antwerp in 1831, and was one of the officers who saved the pompous Belgian lion erected on the field of Waterloo from the rage of the French infantry by a few good-natured witticisms at the expense of that rather ridiculous beast. Action being the element of men like MACMAHON, he is found again in Algiers in 1837 prominent in the assault on Constantine. He afterwards commanded a battalion of rifles, and a regiment of the Foreign Legion, and in 1845, as General of Brigade, governed the Province of Oran. July 16, 1852, he became a general of division; and in 1855 was despatched to succeed General CANROBERT at Sebastopol. On the 8th September of that year the perilous honor of leading the storming party against the Malakoff was confided to him, and in an instant he found himself famous. He was almost the first man to enter the Russian works, and swearing to stay there, "living or dead," rallied his troops so constantly and ardently to the defence, that all the obstinate gallantry of the Russian battalions was wasted upon the attack. He commanded in Italy the Second Division, and has now won the distinction, unparalleled, we believe, in history, of receiving on one battle-field his ducal coronet and his baton of Marshal of France. Our Irish fellow-citizens will doubtless take no small share of the glory of Magenta to themselves in virtue of the new Duke's share in the action, and they have certainly reason to be proud of their kinsman.

The Important Battles of the Century.

Although it is, of course, as yet, impossible to enter upon any detailed criticism of the tremendous battle fought at Magenta on the 4th and 5th of June, yet the telegrams already received shadow forth the proportions of the conflict in a form so imposing that to find any parallel for this "dance of death" we must go back far beyond the memories of most men now living in the prime of life. The things of which we have read with mingled wonder, horror and admiration, in the history of the great wars of the Empire, are now almost literally reënacting under our own eyes.

The war of the Crimea itself, though it startled the world from the repose of years, and indicated what war on the old battle-fields must be were it ever opened there again, was yet but a sort of overture to the great struggle of which the bitter earnest has now begun. In the annexed comparative list of the forces engaged in some of the most remarkable actions of the present century, the reader will find the means of estimating the stupendous character which the present war promises to assume. In comparison with the forces engaged at Magenta, at the lowest unofficial estimate of their numbers, the armies which contested some of the hardest-fought fields of modern history, were but divisions and brigades. The combined troops of BONAPARTE and MELAS at Marengo, amounted to hardly more than half of the Austrian army at Magenta. The great field of Austerlitz, that miracle of battles, as it has been called, was fought and won by rival hosts numbering in all 160,000 men. The battle of Magenta must have arrayed at least a quarter of a million of men in hostile arms. It is only in the Napoleonic campaigns of 1809 and 1812, that we can find any armies comparable, in numerical importance, with those now contending to decide the fate of Italy.

The most hotly-fought fields of the Peninsular war and of the Crimea seem small in the presence of those masses of desperate and determined valor. Inkerman was fought and won by an allied force hardly more numerous than the French divisions which defended Montebello on the 20th of May. Maida, that famous British battle, which did so much to cheer the dispirited British troops, and to reassure them in the prospect of meeting the Continental armies, was contested by forces inferior to the armies engaged at our victory of Buena Vista.

It is true that the moral significance of conflicts is frequently out of proportion with the numbers engaged. The victories of Marengo, Maida and New-Orleans are signal illustrations of this fact. But the magnitude of the interests at stake in the present Italian war, involving as they do the triumph of absolutist reaction or progressive independence on the Continent of Europe, is not unworthily represented in this gigantic scale of the opposing armaments; and if anything could reconcile us to such terrible scenes as are brought before the imagination by the tidings of Magenta, it should be the consideration that out of all this carnage and calamity we may reasonably look for the restoration of a great people to permanent peace, honorable industry, and the cause of civilized progress.

NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Report Relative to the Return of Santa Anna to Mexico—The New Loan—Our Naval Force in the Gulf, &c.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 19.

No credit is given by the Government, or at the Mexican Legation, to the statements published in reference to the intention of SANTA ANNA to return to Mexico. There is confidence in the final success of the Constitutional Government.

There is much anxiety felt with regard to the Tennessee, from Vera Cruz, now overdue at New-Orleans seven days. It is still considered probable that she may have been detained by Mr. MCLANE to bring the important treaty which was being negotiated—this voyage being understood to be her last this season.

Already our enterprising citizens begin to besiege the new Mexican Minister with bogus claims of railroad grants and indemnities, and are making efforts to draw over our own Government into their support; but it is believed that the Administration has too much sagacity to be humbugged in this matter. Indeed, it is known that these bogus claimants have received a check.

There being much misapprehension as to the proposed five million loan, now advertised by the Treasury Department, it may be stated that it is solely for the purpose of meeting the Treasury notes which have fallen due, and, in fact, is nothing more than a reissue of Treasury notes. The receipts into the Treasury are ample for the necessities of Government.

Army contractors, transportation-to-Utah contractors, and firearms contractors, are gathering here in force, and are hob-nobbing with the War Department officials. Some Government spoils are in questi on.

[FROM THE REPORTER FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Sunday, June 19.

The naval vessels in the Gulf will be dispatched to any point where American interests require protection from the Reactionists, without first communicating with the Federal authorities at Washington. The Liberal Government will readily accept the efforts of Minister MCLANE, who has ample power in the premises, and will permit the landing of our forces for that purpose.

Information was received here to-night, from New Orleans, brought by the steamer Jasper, by way of Tehuantepec, to the effect that alarming reports prevailed along the line of the road, as to the growing power of the Church Party, which is said to be dealing very summarily with foreigners, more especially all who were in the slightest degree implicated in the revolutionary movements of the opposite party. DEGOLLADO, the Liberal general, has been called to Vera Cruz by JUAREZ, as Minister of War.

The proposed loan of five millions, the bids for which are to be opened to-morrow, is to meet the Treasury notes which have already fallen due and been redeemed. It is considered nothing more nor less than a reissue of Treasury notes.

The Sardinian Minister was overjoyed on receiving the news by the Anglo-Saxon. He left for New-York this afternoon.

Murder and Suicide in Dunkirk.

DUNKIRK, Saturday, June 18.

This morning, about 9½ o'clock, the dead bodies of MARTIN SAUER, his wife and only child, were found in an upper room of the emigrant house kept by SAUER, on Buffalo-street. The wife's throat must have been cut while asleep in bed, causing almost instant death, the windpipe being entirely severed. The child, six years of age, was on another bed, with her throat horribly mangled. The body of SAUER was found in a reclining position by the side of the bedstead on which the child lay. It is supposed the deed was done some time in the night, as the house was observed to be closed up to the time of the discovery. SAUER kept an emigrant boarding-house, and was connected by marriage with respectable German families in town. The affair creates intense excitement. The Coroner is now holding an inquest. It is known that the parties had not lived a quiet life for some time, but whether the deed was committed under the influence of liquor is not known.

Murder in Virginia.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, June 19.

Yesterday Mayor SWAN received a dispatch from Norfolk, stating that B. F. FLANNIGAN, of Princess Anne's County, Va., had been brutally murdered, and that WALTER S. LAND, of the same place, charged with being the murderer, had left Norfolk on Saturday evening for Baltimore, in company with his wife. The parties are all highly respectable. Shortly after, a person bearing the same name, was arrested at Barnum's Hotel, where he had just arrived and registered his name. He was committed for further examination. The accused professed willingness to return without waiting for a requisition, and will probably be taken back to-morrow.

PERSONAL.

Mr. William E. Robinson, of this City, sailed yesterday for Ireland, in the City of Washington, accompanied by his wife. He revisits his native country for the first time since his arrival here twenty-three years ago, and bears with him the hearty good wishes of more friends than it falls to the lot of most men to possess. A few days since some of his personal friends gave him a complimentary dinner at the Metropolitan Hotel, on which occasion there was a sumptuous entertainment, together with expressions of cordial regard from men whose friendship would do honor to any citizen, however distinguished and worthy.

The President, says the States, will make his annual visit to his favorite Summer retreat, the Bedford Springs, about the middle of July, where he will abide Soldiers' Home, to escape the heat of Washington, until October.

TONNAGE OF THE WORLD.—An English paper says: "At present it may interest our readers to know the extent of the merchant marine, from which may be estimated the real maritime power. The tonnage of the world is about 15 millions, the United States being first, United Kingdom second, France third, and British colonies fourth, but if we take Great Britain and her colonies together they amount to a trifle over that of the Great Republic. This is a sad change from 1813, when all the European ports were blockaded by us, not an enemy's ship appearing on the ocean, except those of our cousins, with whom, as well as the Great NAPOLEON, we were then at war. Our merchant marine far exceeded the rest of the world. Now we only stand as 1 to 3! When Parliament meets British shipping should in all respects be placed on an equality with foreign by reciprocity. Since the change of the Navigation laws, without it foreign has increased in our carrying trade as 4 to 1. Let us then have justice done to this great national interest, the nursery of our fleet.

TORNADO AT EMBDEN, ME

THE WEST INDIES.

The Creole Population of Trinidad.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PORT OF SPAIN, Island of Trinidad, Friday, April 1, 1859.

The population of Trinidad, according to the census of 1851, was, in round numbers, 69,000 souls, and taking into consideration the great mortality by the cholera of 1854, the present increase over the estimate of the last census must be small. For all purposes of statistical information, it is safe to put down the population of 1858 at 70,000. The inhabitants are a curious mixture of races—European, Asiatic, African and American. Originally settled by a few Spanish families, and deemed insignificant as compared with the gold and silver regions on the Main, Trinidad failed to attract the attention of the home Government, and as late as 1783 we find the population only 2,763, of whom 2,032 were Indians. About this time an immigration from the French islands commenced, and in ten years the population increased to 17,718, including 10,009 slaves. In 1797 Trinidad became, by conquest, a British Colony, and the Anglo-SAXON was added to the French, Spanish, African and Indian elements of its population. Indeed it is most curious to observe at the present day, in the Trinidadian Creoles of African descent, the types of the three European, as well as of the native American races. To complicate still more this amalgamation of peoples, there have been imported into the Colony during the last thirteen years about 30,000 immigrant laborers—principally Indian Coolies—a population which is fast giving to the Island its only want, a laboring class.

The question of population is a most interesting one, as far as Trinidad is concerned, for in it is involved the success or failure of free labor within its limits. But before attempting to form any opinion, or come to any conclusion, pro or con., on the subject of free labor, it should be remembered that Trinidad must be judged on her own merits, and with reference to no other island or colony in these latitudes. She is as much an exception to any rule or any general idea that may be formed about the West Indies as Barbados is, though nothing can be more complete than the contrast between these two Islands. Trinidad is the very opposite of Barbados in climate, soil, population, and in all that can affect a country or its inhabitants. Trinidad is a new island very recently settled—Barbados had a population of 100,000 two centuries ago. Trinidad has an area of 1,287,600 square acres, of which about 60,000 only are under cultivation. Barbados, covering some 106,000 acres, is cultivated from end to end, like a garden. Trinidad, even under Slavery, never had anything like an adequate laboring population. Barbados is so thickly inhabited that work or starvation is the laborer's only choice.

In Trinidad land is exceedingly rich, plentiful and cheap, while labor is scarce and extravagantly high—in Barbados land is dear and labor is comparatively cheap. So that it is impossible to make the case of Barbados applicable in any one particular to Trinidad, or vice versa. The only similarity between the two islands is that sugar is the staple production of both, and that both have been successful, though from very different causes, under a free-labor system. I have already stated in a former letter that each West India colony should be judged on its own merits, for I do believe that a departure from this principle—a classification of the whole, and an adoption of results without understanding details—has led to much error and inconsistent argument. Upon this basis, then, and no other, I shall give the result, such as it is, of some passing observations on Trinidad and her condition since emancipation.

The great majority of the people of Trinidad are negroes and half-castes. They include creoles of this and other islands, brought here in the days of Slavery; native Africans imported as free laborers from Sierra Leone; Africans taken from captured slavers; and a few hundred liberated slaves, who immigrated to this island about sixteen years ago from the United States. Many of these people are nearly and some are perfectly white, and the census, probably from the fear of giving offence, does not classify the population according to color. For convenience sake I shall speak of all the colored inhabitants of the island as creoles of African descent. Their number, according to the best information I can obtain, slightly exceeds 43,000. On looking back to the period immediately preceding emancipation, we find the total number of slaves to have been about 21,080 and the free colored about 16,000. Of the former class not more than 11,000 were field laborers. To-day the number of creoles attached to sugar and cacao estates is not more than 4,000, and this falling off in the native and natural laboring force has been attributed here, as in other islands—and I must add without very much reflection—to the effect of abolition, to the indolence of the negro, and his refusal to work except under compulsion. I am unable to arrive at any such conclusion. I have taken some pains to trace the creole laborers from the time of emancipation—after they left the estates and dispersed—to the present day, and the great majority of them can, I think, be followed step by step—not downwards in the path of idleness and poverty, but upwards in the scale of civilization to positions of greater independence.

Perhaps in no island was impending ruin, consequent upon emancipation, so glaring, so palpable, so apparently certain, as it was in Trinidad after the liberation of the slaves. Unlike other Caribbean islands, the seasons in Trinidad are purely tropical, divided into the Rainy and Dry. The latter only lasts five months, and if the planter has not completed his crop operations by the 1st of June, his loss is certain and irremediable. For this reason steady labor in Trinidad during the crop season was and is of paramount importance, and the planters had every reason to be alarmed that, in this island above all others, the effect of emancipation would be to deprive them of that continuous labor with which they were already so scantily supplied. Here was a country covering 1,287,600 acres, of which over a million of acres of rich land were capable of cultivation, with only some 30,000 acres already grown in canes, cacao, coffee, and pasture. The result which the planters apprehended—namely, that the emancipated laborers would prefer cultivating their own land when land could be bought at a nominal cost—might have been apprehended with equal propriety in any other country in the world where an abundance of rich territory offered the most tempting invitation to settlers. This very result happens in all new countries where men are free and independent to act for themselves and their own interests. There labor is necessarily high—often not to be procured at any price at all. Trinidad, after emancipation, was a parallel case to some of our Western territories, with the difference, a most important one, that she had the evil of tropical seasons to contend against. The laborers, as soon as they were free, asked and for a time received higher wages than the planters, incumbered as their property was with debt, could afford to pay, and when this rate of wages was subsequently reduced, the majority of the emancipated laborers deserted the estates to better their condition and to seek for a more independent livelihood. A very large number purchased small tracts of land and began to plant for themselves; a few squatted on Crown lands, of which the Government holds an enormous proportion; while many took to trade, and, setting up as petty shopkeepers in the towns, pursued a calling more congenial with their tastes and inclinations. The planters vainly endeavored to remedy the evil; in vain they adopted most stringent measures to prevent the increase of small proprietors and keep up a sufficient laboring force for the estates. They imposed heavy taxes on all lands and buildings except those devoted to sugar manufacture. But their measures were futile; their policy, as I attempted to show in a former letter from Barbados, was suicidal. Instead of endeavoring to promote a good understanding between themselves and their laborers, the planters adopted and still retain in Trinidad the odious system of tenancy-at-will. The laborer who lives on an estate is compelled to work for that estate and no other on peril of ejection, with consequent loss of the crop which he has raised on his little allotment. He is still in a position of virtual slavery, and it is a matter which can excite no surprise that, after emancipation, those who had means to purchase parcels of ground should prefer to leave the estates and either cultivate for themselves or be free to give their labor to whom they pleased, upon their own terms, and in a way which would secure for themselves and their families a greater independence. They, accordingly, did leave the estates; and in a few years after abolition, the majority of the entire laboring force—itself always inadequate to the wants of the large and rapidly developing colony—were lost to the proprietary. Several estates, for want of the necessary labor, were deserted, and at one time it seemed probable that sugar cultivation in Trinidad would be altogether abandoned.

We have now some insight into the course pursued by these 11,000 field laborers of Trinidad who, twenty years ago, were released from bondage, and the knowledge leads to some important conclusions closely affecting the question of emancipation. Of the entire number, only two or three thousand remained on the Estates. These men, in spite of all drawbacks—in spite of an illiberal tenure and a lower rate of wages than they could command elsewhere—remained steadfast in their attachment to the land upon which they were born; but, like the laboring population of Barbados, which, from its density was compelled to remain in a servile condition, the creole field laborers of Trinidad have not progressed with their brethren in general intelligence and worldly prosperity. They supply labor to nearly all the cacao estates; but comparatively few are to be met with on the sugar plantations. As to that portion of the creole laboring population which left the estates, and which I estimate at 8,000, I do not hesitate to say that their material condition has been very much improved, though, for a time, their desertion threw the planting interest into the greatest embarrassment. Five-sixths of them became proprietors of from one to ten acres, which they now own and which they grow in provisions for themselves and families: to supply other wants they give casual labor to the estates. But they are free of the estates, and can work for whom they please, or whom they deem the best pay-master. In almost every creole hut, after crop-time, a plentiful supply of rice may be seen—and sometimes cacao, grown by the owner upon his own lot. If he does not choose to sell this, he will work on an estate for as much money as he may require; but his labor—not being a certain or continuous labor—is lightly esteemed by the planter, and hence these small proprietors are not classed among the regular laboring force of the Island. Yet I have been assured that, during crop-time, as many as four or five thousand of these independent laborers and small proprietors will work on the estates; and I do not think the proportion so small when the immense number of creoles engaged in trade are taken into consideration.

My sympathies on this question are certainly with the white and not with the black population, but the interests of both in the West Indies are nearly identical. I am surprised, therefore, that after so important a step as emancipation was taken, so little was done to turn emancipation to the best account. I cannot see that, in a moral sense, the emancipated class, as a class, have undergone a decided improvement. In every free island that I have visited the blacks and mulattos are more offensive, more vicious and more turbulent, though, it must be admitted, far more intelligent and energetic than they are in our own States under the restrictions of Slavery. But I must deny that they lack industry when by industry they can add to their means or advance their prosperity. Nor can I agree with the West India planter who denounces the creole laborers as thriftless vagabonds, because they have preferred independence to servitude, or the pursuit of trade to that of agriculture. Unquestionably there is a certain amount of idleness and vagabondism among the creole laborers of Trinidad, but I see no evidence that these vices exist in a larger proportion among them than they would exist among any other class of laborers similarly situated. In leaving the estates the great majority were actuated by a desire to better their circumstances and to lead a more independent life. Land was cheap and abundant, and they preferred to have their own property rather than labor at low wages in a condition of precarious servitude. Added to this, the course of the planters contributed greatly to the very evil which they dreaded, and from which they afterwards so severely suffered. Instead of endeavoring by liberal terms to induce the laborers to remain on the estates, they commenced a system, shortly after emancipation, of giving less wages and exacting more work: and when the laborers retired, as they did, from estate to field work, they were summarily ejected from the houses and lands they occupied on the estates, and their provision grounds were destroyed. The emancipated laborers had therefore no resource left but to separate themselves from the planting interest.

In the observations I have made I have spoken principally of that portion of the emancipated class who remained agriculturists. Those who forsook field labor for trade offer also an apology for their course, though its wisdom we may be permitted to question. Work in the cane fields was the negro's sole occupation in the days of Slavery, and this species of work he is now disposed to look upon as degrading, and to fancy that it drags him back to the condition of servitude from which he has been liberated. Here we find an explanation of the large and utterly disproportionate numbers of colored people engaged in trade—from keeping a store down to selling a sixpence worth of mangoes on the street. Not only have the tradesmen of 1830 and the free creoles of that period continued to follow mercantile and mechanical pursuits, but the laborers, after they were freed, made every exertion to bring up their children as traders or mechanics, and the consequence is that to-day these professions in Trinidad are almost entirely supplied from the colored population—the emancipated class and their descendants. If we take Port-of-Spain as an illustration, we find that four-fifths of the inhabitants—creoles of African descent—are engaged in trade, and their condition, I must add, is one of prosperity and independence. I have personal knowledge of many instances where great wealth has been accumulated by men who were slaves themselves a quarter of a century ago. Trade seems to be the destiny of the Trinidadian creoles, for the position they once occupied as tillers of the soil is already filled by another race.

The moral condition of the people whom I have thus briefly endeavored to trace, from the time of Slavery down to the present day, has not kept pace with their material prosperity, and all I have said of Barbadians, in a former letter on this particular head, may, with still greater force, be applied to Trinidad. The amalgamation of the European and African races is even more general in Trinidad than in Barbados, and, though marriages between whites and people of color is not opposed here with anything like the feeling it meets with in Barbadian society, yet I find, on examination, that in Port-of-Spain the ratio of births is 100 legitimate to 136 illegitimate—an exhibition of morality considerably below that of Havana. I may say that the so-called prejudices against color are less to be observed in Trinidad than any other Island in the British West Indies. Perhaps it is that there are more wealthy and intelligent creoles here than there are in other colonies, and I can assert, from my own experience, that Trinidad can boast of many creole planters who in mind and manner are most accomplished gentlemen. But, as I said before, the great mass of the colored population do not exhibit any great improvement in morality. Taking up the matter of crime, and comparing Trinidad in 1859, with a population of 70,000, to Trinidad in 1830, with a population of 40,000, I find that the average of convicted offenders for the last five years was, for felony, 63; for misdemeanor, 865, and for debt, 230; against a similar average before emancipation of felony, 20; misdemeanor, 19, and debt, 2! It is to be observed that stealing is the principal crime under the head of misdemeanor. Arson is frequent, and the perpetrators are discovered with great difficulty—more often they go unpunished. The criminal records of Trinidad show that a majority of the felonies have been committed in uncontrollable ebullitions of anger; in the minor offences the most curious deliberation and cunning is often apparent. It is also a fact worthy of remark that the County of Victoria gives the largest proportion of offenders. This is the most important agricultural district of the colony; but while it gives the largest number of criminals, it shows, at the same time, the lowest proportion of small independent proprietors, as well as by far the greatest number of estate laborers. The inference is that that portion of the emancipated class which left the estates attained a higher status of morality, as they undoubtedly did of material prosperity, by the course they pursued, though that course was directly hostile to the planting interest.

Trinidad, like all the other islands, is lamentably behind the age in educational science, and there is ample room to hope that when knowledge becomes more general, crime will decrease. Educational statistics do not show that there is any great eagerness on the part of the creole population to learn, or on that of their rulers to place the means of instruction within their reach. Before emancipation, the number of children attending public and private schools was above a thousand; last year the average of children attending all the schools and seminaries was considerably under 3,000, accounting for little more than the natural increase of the population. In fact, no system of public instruction was introduced until 1851—but that system has many excellent features. The schools were made purely secular; a Board of Education and an Inspectorship of Schools were created; also, a school for training masters and mistresses, whose efficiency for office is determined by the strictest scrutiny. The estimate for educational expenses in Trinidad this year is $20,000. In regard to Church statistics, I have no means of ascertaining the number of persons who attend places of Divine worship in this island; but were they in my possession, I should not have much faith in them as an evidence of the moral or religious tone of the community. To judge from appearances, the creole inhabitants of Port-of-Spain are even more fond of showing off their Sunday garments than they are in Barbados. More than one-half of the entire population of the island are Roman Catholics, and the superior zeal of that establishment to secure proselytes may account for the outward devotion of its children.

These conclusions in regard to the African creoles of Trinidad are much the same as those that I formed of the creoles of Barbados. Their, industry, energy: and intelligence have been developed under freedom but vice and immorality, having equal play, have advanced step by step with material prosperity.

My next letter shall be devoted to the foreign labor with which this and other British Colonies are being rapidly supplied.

Travel westward will be cheap enough this Summer. Besides the reduction in through railroad fares, the price of passage on the Lake Erie steamers from Buffalo to Cleveland has been reduced to two dollars.

POLITICAL.

The Hon. JOHN MCQUEEN, Member of Congress from South Carolina, being unable to attend a barbecue recently given in honor of some Army officer at Marion Court-house, sent a letter, filled with the most rancorous expressions of hostility to the North. His views of the rumored reconciliation of the Douglas and Buchanan interests are expressed with considerable fervor:

"There is now no party North, or scarcely the fragment of a party, who do not openly deny to us our clearest rights under the Constitution which bound us together; and if, as stated recently, the Douglas Democracy and the Administration agree to unite in the determination to "ignore" our most important and vital rights, then I can entertain no other view of it, than that by the united Democracy North, when we know that the whole section is mainly abolitionized, we are not only to be robbed, but our understanding insulted by the idea that we have neither the intelligence or the courage to resist; give me an open and acknowledged Black Republican first, who would not attempt to coil round me before he crushes me, but give me the chance to measure arms with him, and so far as I am concerned, I would yield up the last flickering spark of life which the God of nature has given me before I would submit to the dominion of either."

Mr. MCQUEEN'S programme, in the event of a Republican triumph in 1860, is explicitly stated:

"It is not for me to prescribe, at this time, the precise mode of our redress, in the event of the election of a Black Republican, in 1860; all I will say is, that the result will be known in November of that year, and the inauguration would not take place till March, 1861; within these four months, it will be the duty of the Southern States to confer together and act promptly, and never submit to the quiet surrender of the sword, the purse, and the Navy, to our vilest enemies."

The Kentucky canvass is marked by a series of personal collisions. The last one reported occurred a day or two ago, between GARRETT DAVIS and Capt. SIMMS, the latter a Democratic candidate for Congress. An article had appeared in the Paris Citizen, saying that "Capt. SIMMS was as much of a traitor to the Whig Party as BENEDICT ARNOLD was to his country." Mr. DAVIS avowed himself the author of the article. The scene that followed is described as follows:

"Capt. SIMMS then said that Mr. DAVIS already had his opinion of the article; and DAVIS said: 'And I also take this occasion, after what has been said by Capt. SIMMS, to denounce him before this audience as a scoundrel, a calumniator, and a coward.' A correspondent of the Louisville Journal says that upon this SIMMS looked in several directions for the Christian Sabbath.' Other accounts say that both gentlemen used very personal language, calling each other liars and cowards. How they will get out of it without a duel is the question that agitates Kentucky."

Mr. JOHN G. SAXE appeared in the Democratic Convention in Vermont last week, accepted the nomination for Governor, and in the course of his speech remarked:

"He trusted that a faithful service, chiefly in the ranks, for something more than twenty years, had sufficiently attested his Democracy; but as to the particular line of policy he should pursue in his possible Executive career—he should have much pleasure in setting it forth in the plainest manner, and in unexceptionable English in his first message.. [Loud laughter and applause.] He was not surprised at the laughter. It had too long been considered a joke to suppose that the Democracy should ever be victorious in Vermont. He was not himself impervious to facetious ideas, but surely this large and enthusiastic Convention seemed to him to promise something more formidable than what the enemy was accustomed to call the annual farce of an election. If Democrats did not so look upon it, there were many intelligent Republicans in the State, (intelligent as Republicans could fairly be,) who looked upon it differently, and who well knew that Truth was always in a minority at first. He did not flatter himself that success would be easy, but he hoped that this convention would so inspire the Democracy of Vermont that they would hereafter redouble their efforts for the triumph which was sure to come at no distant day.

Powers of Notaries Under the Last Act of the Legislature.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: The recent act of the Legislature, giving to Notaries Public the powers of Commissioners of Deeds, though very plain and clear in its terms, appears to have been by some either grossly misconstrued, or most willfully perverted. Commissioners, as is well known, are, as they always have been, empowered to administer oaths and take the acknowledgment of deeds, only within the respective counties for which they are appointed, and where they must reside. It is well known they cannot act in any other county.

Under the Statute, Notaries must always reside in the counties for which they are respectively appointed, but might perform their duties (such as they were under the old law, i. e., protesting commercial papers, &c.,) anywhere within the State.

Now, as the number of Notaries for New-York City is limited by statute, and appointments were consequently procured with some difficulty, a great many who live in the neighboring counties, where the number of appointments is not limited, get appointed as from those counties, but perform their duties in New-York, where they do business. This, though perhaps within the letter of the statute, and perhaps all right and proper, seems certainly to be a slight evasion of its spirit, as the statute has limited the number of Notaries for New-York City.

But, by the new law of last Winter, Notaries are given, in addition to their former powers, all the powers of Commissioners of Deeds.

Under this law very many of these notaries appointed for other counties, but doing business here, have undertaken to act as Commissioners for New-York City and County. The question which now arises, and which it is the object of this article to answer, is, Have such persons a right to act as Commissioners for New-York City? Our answer, in brief, to this inquiry is, that they have not, and we will state our reasons for so answering.

As the very act granting these powers to Notaries has distinctly defined and limited them, the easiest way of determining this question is by quoting the words of the act itself. Leaving out the usual preamble and finale, the act entire reads as follows: "In addition to their present powers, the Notaries Public of this State are hereby authorized to administer oaths and affirmations, and to take the proof and acknowledgments of deeds, mortgages and any other papers for use or record in this State, in all cases where the same may now be taken by Commissioners of Deeds, and under the same rules, regulations and requirements prescribed to Commissioners of Deeds, and such Notaries' acts may be performed without official seal."

The pretext under which they assume this authority, viz.: to act as Commissioners for New-York City, is that under the old law, Notaries, though they must live in the counties for which they are appointed, can perform their duties anywhere in the State; and so they can as to all powers conferred or allowed under the old law.

But this last act, in giving new and extraordinary powers to Notaries, has at the same time most carefully limited and defined the extent of those powers. They may be exercised—i. e., oaths administered and acknowledgments taken—"in all cases where the same may now be taken by Commissioners of Deeds, and under the same rules, regulations and requirements prescribed to Commissioners of Deeds," &c. The only criterion, then, by which to determine the extent to which these newly-acquired powers can be exercised by Notaries is to ascertain what are the powers of Commissioners! No one supposes that Commissioners can act out of the county for which they are appointed; neither, then, can Notaries, acting as Commissioners, act out of the counties for which they are respectively appointed. To adopt the other construction would, instead of giving Notaries the same powers as Commissioners, be giving them far greater powers than Commissioners ever enjoyed.

There are, perhaps, two or three hundred Notaries, appointed for the adjacent counties, and acting in this City. Many of these are assuming to have the powers of Commissioners for New-York City, and are actually exercising those powers. If this was even a matter of doubt, a regard for their own oaths of office, as well as for the interests of the community, would suggest the propriety of their refraining to exercise questionable powers until the Courts had passed upon the subject.

But the terms of this act have so distinctly defined the extent of the powers which it grants, as to leave it no matter of doubt whatever.

We deem it a duty to the public that they should be made aware of these facts, that they may be placed on their guard as to who are authorized to exercise the powers of Commissioners, as they must be aware that an oath or acknowledgment taken before an officer not authorized, is entirely nugatory and void.

VERITAS.

Soldiers in Broadway.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As I rode up Broadway in a stage yesterday, we were met by a company of soldiers who spread themselves out nearly the whole width of the street. In order to save turning into a side street, our driver kept as near the sidewalk as possible. When the company came up there was scarcely room for them to pass. One of them stepped up and struck our horses with the but end of his gun. This scared the horses, and they jumped upon the sidewalk, thus putting in danger the walkers. Now what right have these target companies to spread themselves out the whole width of Broadway, and thus incommode hundreds?

A LOOKER ON.

GREAT TORNADO ON THE PLAINS.—We learn from the Council Bluffs Bugle, of the 7th inst., that Mr. C. DURHAM and company, of Marion County, Iowa, recently met with a terrible disaster on the Plains, about twenty miles above Fort Kearney. Just as the company had encamped for the night, a terrible tornado blew up, accompanied by torrents of hailstones. Three wagons were literally torn to atoms. Mr. DURHAM'S trunk was carried off, and never found; one ox was carried over the creek; their ox-yokes were carried two and a half miles from camp, and the entire company were carried from fifty to one hundred and fifty yards; their outfit was destroyed, and a tree ten inches in diameter was uprooted, and carried seven miles. Fortunately, no lives were lost. Two of the company purchased a wagon, and went on across the plains to the mines, while Mr. DURHAM patched up a wagon out of the three broken ones, and passed through to Council Bluffs on Tuesday last, en route for home, perfectly satisfied with his adventures on the Plains.

Mysterious Disappearance of a Doctor—Subsequent History of his Wife.

From the Cleveland Herald, June 16.

Some weeks since a young woman living in domestic service at Cambridge, MASS., was taken violently sick. A bed was obtained for her in the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston. On her partial recovery it became necessary to inquire what her prospects of support were, when she stated that she was an absolute stranger in New-England, and was almost entirely destitute of both money and clothing. Farther Inquiries revealed the following extraordinary history.

She states that she was the adopted daughter of Mr. FOOS, of Springfield, Ohio, and bore his name previous to her marriage. She became the wife of Dr. B. F. BALTZLEY, of this city, homœopathic physician, who resided here about the year 1857. About that time—how long after the marriage is not known—her husband fell sick, and, whilst convalescing, suddenly and mysteriously disappeared. She says that he probably fell into the river whilst crossing a bridge, at evening, he being very feeble, but there is a veil of mystery and suspicion over the manner of his disappearance. Mrs. B., at all events, considered herself a widow. Her husband was about twenty-three years of age at the time of his disappearance. Mrs. FOOS, on learning the disappearance of her adopted daughter's husband, came to Cleveland and took Mrs. B. to Springfield with her. But Mrs. F., who tenderly loved her adopted daughter, died within a few weeks. Mr. FOOS then broke up house and went to Kentucky, with the purpose of remaining some time at least among his friends. It would seem that something had occurred to estrange him from his adopted daughter, for he left her to shift for herself after he quitted Springfield.

Not long after this Mrs. B. returned to Cleveland, partly from a preference for this city as a place of residence, and partly from a desire to enter on a course of education at a commercial college, so that she might be enabled to earn a livelihood by her own means. Whilst in Cleveland at this time she fell in with a young man, going under the name of William Franklin, whose acquaintance she had made some years previous, while attending school at Cincinnati. This young man, whose name is supposed to be fictitious, she describes as being intelligent, gentlemanly, and moving in the best society of Cleveland. She furthermore says that he was then holding a situation under one of the Cleveland Railroad Companies. She states that Franklin did not visit her at her boarding house, but was in the habit of walking with her after the close of the daily session at the academy. She gives no direct statement as to the extent of her intimacy with him, but evidently withholds much information in regard to their acquaintance, and was very desirous that her friends should not be made acquainted with the fact of the connection.

After this acquaintance had continued some time FRANKLIN went East, and finally reached Boston. From this point he wrote her to come East, as she could there find employment. Previous to his leaving Cleveland he had borrowed some money and a gold watch from her, and at the time his letter arrived she had been sick and was so short of funds that she had to leave a trunk of valuable clothing in order to pay her board bill. On arriving at Boston she found that the information as to her obtaining employment was utterly deceptive, and she was reduced to distress. She therefore sought employment at an intelligence office, and by this means found a situation in a respectable boarding-house in Cambridge as chambermaid and assistant at table. Here she renewed her acquaintance with her lover, and repeatedly received his visits. At this time he passed under the name of WILLIAM S. KING, Jr., and stated that he was the son of a respectable gentleman of that name residing in Boston. This, on inquiry, was found to be false. Mr. KING denying all knowledge of the person assuming to be his son. The connection continued thus for some time when his feelings changed towards her, and he treated her with harshness and cruelty. He even forced from her the money she had received for wages whilst in the situation she then held, and, having obtained this, left the place. Mrs. B. then was taken violently sick, as before stated, and became an inmate of the hospital. On her partial recovery she was placed as a boarder in a respectable family at Cambridge, until something more should be known of her. FRANKLIN, or KING, has been seen by her once since her sickness, and she says that he then looked as if in bad circumstances. She wears an engagement ring, which she says was given her by him. It bears the initials "W. S. K." Mrs. B. describes FRANKLIN, or KING, as being apparently about 28 years of age, of rather small stature, light complexion and brown hair.

The gentlemen who have interested themselves in her case wrote to the Rev. J. B. BALTZLEY, of Wooster, Ohio, brother of the Doctor who had so mysteriously disappeared, and in reply he says: "Just as soon as she will give a true, simple and satisfactory account of my brother's disappearance and whereabouts, I will sympathize and do something for her; but no sooner." Dr. DANIEL EGBERT, U. S. N., resident in Philadelphia, whose name was given as the brother of Mrs. Foos, has been written to. His reply confirms many of the particulars of Mrs. B.'s statement. He says "she was educated with the strictest regard to religion." In connection with this may be stated the fact that she told one of the gentlemen interested in her story that she was brought up in the Episcopal Church, and she received with apparent gladness a Prayer Book which was given her. Dr. EGBERT further writes that there was a mystery about the husband's disappearance which had not been cleared up, and that he had therefore declined all correspondence with her.

Finding no other means of getting at the facts of her story, Rev. WARREN BURTON, one of the gentlemen taking an interest in the unhappy woman, applied to Mr. GEORGE BRADBURN, who gave the name of the Rev. Dr. BOLLES as a proper person to apply to. Mr. BURTON, therefore, on the 8th instant, wrote to Dr. BOLLES, who made inquiries, but could get no new light on the matter. Among the gentlemen named as having her case under consideration, is the Rev. Dr. HUNTINGTON, Professor in the University at Cambridge.

Remarkable Meteoric Phenomena.

From the Oswego Palladium, June 16.

On Wednesday morning, the inhabitants of the towns of Boylston and Redfield, in this county, were startled by the occurrence of a most remarkable phenomenon—the descent from the heavens of an immense meteoric mass. The body struck the earth between the hours of 3 and 4 P. M., with a crash that was truly terrific, and the shock was sensibly felt and people aroused from their sleep at a distance of five miles from the scene. The body fell upon the farm of HORACE SANGER, situated on the line of Boylston and Redfield, striking in a meadow and partially on the highway. It is estimated by our informant to cover about half an acre of land. The earth was torn up in a terrible manner, and large fragments were thrown a distance of two-thirds of a mile. The mass is very irregular in shape, and rises at some points to sixty and eighty feet in height, and is supposed to be imbedded in the earth as many feet. The surface has generally the appearance of iron ore. The excitement occasioned by the event among the inhabitants was intense, and the crash is said to have been terrific beyond description. Many supposed that the final winding up of terrestrial affairs had truly arrived.

Mr. JAMES HADLEY, an intelligent and responsible citizen of the town of Redfield, who resides about one mile from the scene, writes:

"I was awakened at about 3 o'clock on Wednesday morning by the room in which I slept being filled with light, and immediately heard a rushing sound like the coming of a great wind. This did not last above a few minutes, after I was awake, when an explosion followed of which I can give no description—it was terrible. The whole house shook as if a hundred cannon had been fired under the windows, quite a number of panes of glass were broken out of the windows, and the plastering of the room in which I came tumbling about me. The light, which was so brilliant that I could plainly see every object in the room, was at once extinguished. The window of my room is on the opposite side of the house from the place where the meteor fell, so that I can only judge of its direction. The light seemed to come from some body moving very rapidly, and from south to north, and seemed to increase rapidly during the brief space that preceded the explosion.

The aerolite struck the earth in some timber-land belonging to Mr. SANGER, in a thinly-inhabited portion of the town. We believe Mr. HADLEY'S is the nearest dwelling. It seems to have been an almost spherical body of, as near as we can judge from the fragments remaining, about seventy-five feet in diameter. Its course was from southwest to northeast, and descended at an angle of not more than thirty degrees from the horizon, which is proved by its track through the heavy hemlock trees before it touched the earth.

Tri-Centennary Celebration in Honor o Shakespeare—Letter from Mr. J. Payne Collier.

From the Toronto Colonist.

The public having beeen informed through our columns, some few weeks since, that a movement had been set on foot to signalize the tri-centennary anniversary of SHAKESPEARE'S birth, by opening a correspondence upon the subject with Mr. PAYNE COLLIER, the distinguished commentator—at once the most able and most genial of SHAKESPEARE'S critics—we are now permitted to publish the letter which was addressed to Mr. COLLIER, and also his reply thereto, which reached Toronto by the last English mail:

TORONTO, C. W., April 27, 1859.

SIR: I have not had occasion to do myself the honor of writing to you for a lengthened period. As you may possibly recollect, the last time I did so was in my quality of President of the Shakespeare Club of Canada (from Montreal,) conveying to you the notification of your having been elected an honorary member of that Association.

The intense interest which was awakened by the Centennary of BURNS has suggested to me, whether we have not far more legitimate reason to expect an enthusiasm adequate to the greater occasion, if the devotees of the mighty bard at once address themselves to the tri-centenary anniversary of the birth of SHAKESPEARE, (in 1864.)

I believe, Sir, it is not a moment too early to moot the matter, and I am satisfied that the proposal will be met with a shout of approval from the whole civilized world. Then should we see all nations and languages uniting in one grand act of homage towards the memory of him "who was not for an age, but for all time."

You, undoubtedly, are the legitimate source from which this project should emanate—his literary executor, the custodian of his name and fame: to you, therefore, shall we look for taking the initiative, of course assuming that you will concur in the propriety of the measure, and that, if so, you will embark in it with your customary vigor and enthusiasm in all matters connected with the embalming of the memory of SHAKSPEARE.

With the truest respect I subscribe myself your most faithful servant,

JOSEPH LEE.

J. PAYNE COLLIER, Somerset House.

Reply of Mr. Collier.

RIVERSIDE, MAIDENHEAD, BERKS, MAY 23, 1859.

MY DEAR SIR—I am extremely glad to see your handwriting again; it brings to my mind many agreeable recollections of your most laudable zeal and activity.

I hope you have been well and prosperous. I remember, too, your kind intimation of my election as an honorary member of the Shakspeare Club of Canada, of which you are the President.

My interest in reference to Shakspeare and his works is unabated, but I am now too far advanced in life (70) to take any active part in the undertaking to which your letter of 27th April refers. It only reached me a few days ago, or I would have answered it sooner.

No doubt there will be many, at the proper time, who will be anxious to take the initiative in such a matter; but I hope that it will not be converted into a scheme for private emolument, or even for personal distinction.

As for myself, I have now taken up my "scallop-shell of quiet," as Sir WALTER RALEIGH terms it, and it is not my intention to be compelled again to assume the weapons of hostility. I will never do so willingly.

Heartily thanking you for your letter, and hoping at times to hear from you, when agreeable to yourself, I remain, my dear Sir,

Yours most affectionately,

J. PAYNE COLLIER.

JOSEPH S. LEE, Esq., Toronto.

The Bartholomew Marbles.

From the Hartford Times, June 17.

The collection of the sculptor BARTHOLOMEW'S works, made in Rome by J. G. BATTERSON, Esq., has reached this city. The lot is included in eight large and heavy cases, and much time and labor was taken to get them into the Athenæum. They are to remain, unopened, in the vestibule to the rooms of the Wadsworth Gallery and the Statuary Room, until the return of Mr. BATTERSON. He will sail in the steamer from Liverpool on the 1st of July. On his arrival here, they will be unpacked and placed on exhibition in the Statuary Room, to the attractions of which they will form a very important addition. These works are the property of the corporation of the Athenæum, and the proceeds of their exhibition will be given to the widowed mother of the deceased artist.

The cost of these works, including the journey of Mr. BATTERSON, was estimated at $5,000, and this sum was raised by subscriptions from Hartford people. Mr. B. went out as an Administrator, and settled up the estate of the artist, on which there was considerable indebtedness. The proceeds of the sale of the "Eve" and the "Washington" have gone far towards extinguishing the debts, and the artist's remaining works in Rome, all finished, and including some valuable pieces, have undoubtedly sold for more than enough to liquidate all indebtedness; and whatever sum remains over, as well as anything that may remain of the subscription fund, after paying the expenses of getting the works to Hartford, will be given to Mrs. Bartholomew. Such statues as are not sold in Rome, will probably be brought to this city by Mr. BATTERSON. Most of the works in the Hartford collection are understood to be models. Among them are some of the artist's finest studies.

Celebration of the Bunker Hill Anniversary.

From the Boston Traveller, June 18.

To-day the inhabitants of Charlestown are celebrating the Eighty-fourth Anniversary of the Battle of Bunker Hill, one of the earliest as well as one of the most decisive actions of the War of the Revolution. The people of that patriotic city still keep the "memory green" in regard to the incidents of that fatal but glorious day. In this city, detachments from the various companies composing the Second Regiment, Colonel COWDIN, Commander, paraded, and, accompanied by the Brass Band, made an excursion to Hull.

The annual meeting of the Bunker Hill MONUMENT Association was held this forenoon. The Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON WARREN occupied the chair. After reading the records of the last meeting, the President submitted his annual statement, by which it appeared that the whole number of adults who had visited the monument during the last year was 16,817; number of children under twelve years of age, 816; total, 17,633. Amount of fees received from visitors, $2,576 83. Amount paid by keeper for wages, &c., $749 69. The balance, $1,826 84, was deposited in the Monument Bank.

Dr. J. MASON WARREN then presented to the Association the original plans and drawings of the Monument, including those also which were rejected. A vote of thanks to Mr. WARREN was passed, and also to Mr. LAWRENCE for their valuable gifts.

The following officers were then elected for the ensuing year:

For President—G. WASHINGTON WARREN.

For Vice-Presidents—The President of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanics' Association, ex officio; CHAS. WELLS, JOSEPH T. BUCKINGHAM, EDWARD EVERETT, ROBERT C. WINTHROP.

The old Board of Directors were reëlected.

EXTRAORDINARY SUICIDE IN PHILADELPHIA.—Yesterday afternoon, about 4 o'clock, a German, about 25 or 30 years of age, and of prepossessing appearance, was observed walking up and down the sidewalk, in Fifteenth-street, near Coates. Suddenly he staggered and fell, and upon some persons in the neighborhood going to his assistance, it was discovered that he was dead. Upon making an examination of his body, at the Fifteenth Ward Station-house, where it was taken, it was ascertained that his death was the result of a stab in the left breast, just over the heart. A dirk knife was found in his pocket covered with blood. It seems that the man had opened his shirt-bosom, plunged the knife into his breast, closed his shirt again, shut up his knife and put it in his pocket, and then walked up and down the sidewalk until he fell dead. The Coroner held an inquest on the body and found a number of papers, consisting of passports with the name of AUGUST WEISE written thereon, and a declaration of his intention to become an American citizen, and renouncing his allegiance to CHARLES ALEXANDER, Duke of Saxon Weimar, Germany. From the fact of the latter document having been prepared at Chicago, Ill., in 1856, and from the following note addressed to J. W. SHOEMAKER, Tamaqua, Schuylkill Co., it would appear that the deceased had been a resident of the former place for some time past, and was on his way to the coal region. The note referred to is as follows:

NEW-YORK, Saturday, May 14, 1859.

J. W. SHOEMAKER, Esq.—Dear Sir: The bearer of this is a reliable young man—an intimate friend of mine from Germany—whom I accidently met here. I recommend him to your consideration. My best respects to you and thanks.

[Signed.] CHARLES W. HARAM.

In addition to these papers the sum of six dollars was found in the pockets of the deceased. He was dressed in a light Summer sack, palm figured vest, and black cloth pants. The effects found upon the person of the unfortunate man were taken to the office of the Coroner. A verdict of suicide by stabbing was rendered by the jury.—Bulletin, last evening.

A MAN MURD

ceiving a telegraphic despatch he came to the City, arriving Friday evening.

Adjourned until next Wednesday.

CORPORATION—LIABILITY OF SUBSCRIBERS.

The Reformed Protestant Dutch Church vs. *Susan B. The plaintiffs had judgment and defendant appealed.

PROCEEDINGS FOR VIOLATION OF THE FIRE LAWS—MODE OF TRIAL.

The Fire Department vs. Joseph Harrison—(Common Pleas—General Term.)—The following is the opinion in this case.

BRADY, J.—This action was brought to recover penalties incurred by the erection of four buildings in violation of the fire laws particularly designated in the complaint, and for the judgment of the Court, in accordance with the provisions of the statute, that the several houses be taken down and removed. When the cause was called at the Special Term, the plaintiff's counsel moved that it be tried by the Court, without a jury. The defendant's counsel claimed a trial by jury. The Judge presiding decided that the action should be tried by the Court without a jury, and the defendant excepted. This presents the first question on the appeal.

The Code (Sec. 253) provides that an issue of fact in an action for the recovery of money only, or of specific real or personal property, or for a divorce from the marriage contract on the ground of adultery, must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial be waived, as provided in Sec. 266, or a Referee be ordered, as provided by Secs. 270, 271. Sec. 256 provides that every other issue is triable by the Court, which, however, may order the whole issue, or any specific question of fact involved therein, to be tried by a jury, and Rule 69 of the Supreme Court, in force when this action was tried, and which stated the practice under this section, declared that in cases where the trial of issues of fact was not provided for in Sec. 253 of the Code, if either party should desire a trial by jury, such party should within ten days after issue joined, give notice of a special motion to settle the issues; and that the Court or Judge might settle the issues or might refer the settlement of them to a Referee. This is not one of the class of cases to be tried by a jury specifically mentioned in Sec. 253. It is not for the recovery of money only. It is to recover penalties, and for the removal of buildings erected in violation of law, and no application was made for a jury trial, in conformity with rule 69 supra. Unless, therefore, the Constitutional right of trial by jury has been violated, the defendant was not entitled to a trial in that mode. The Constitution, Sec. 2, Art. 1, adopted 1846, provides that the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, shall remain inviolable forever. But that a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law. The Code, Sec. 266, provides that the trial by jury may be waived by the several parties to an issue of fact in all actions on contract, and with the assent of the Court in other actions in the manner following:

1. By failing to appear at the trial.

2. By consent, in person or by attorney, to be filed with the Clerk, and

3. By oral consent in open Court, and entered in the minutes.

The defendant having appeared at the trial, and not having consented thereto, the trial by jury was not waived in the manner prescribed by law, and it only remains to be considered whether this action is one in which a trial by jury was in use prior to the Constitution of 1846. By the 26th section of the act for the more effectual prevention of fires in the City of New-York, &c., passed March 7, 1849, (Laws of 1849, p. 118,) every dwelling-house, store, store-house, ash-hole, ash-house, shed, or other building, of any description whatever mentioned before in that act, which shall be erected, built, roofed, repaired, altered, enlarged, built upon, or removed, contrary to any of the provisions of the act contained in the preceding sections, is declared to be a common nuisance; and the Justices of the Supreme Court, and Justices of the Court of Oyer and Termiuer and General Jail delivery, and the Justices of the Court of General Sessions of the peace, within the City of New-York, have cognizance of the offence, and are empowered, upon conviction, to adjudge such fines and penalties as they, in their discretion, shall think fit and proper, and also, in their discretion, to cause such nuisances to be abated and removed. By the 30th section of the same act, the Supreme Court of the State of New-York, and the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New-York, in addition to the power of enforcing the penalties provided by law, and by the act, for a violation of the provisions of the statute, are endowed with power to restrain by injunction the further erection of a building, in an action to be brought by the Fire Department, and to adjudge and decree that a building erected in violation of the statute shall be taken down and removed, the statute imposing only as a preliminary to the exercise of this jurisdiction, that ten days' notice to remove the violation shall be given. The nuisance, it will thus be perceived, and the penalty and forfeiture incurred, are declared by statute. The erections which the statute was designed to prevent would not be nuisances at common law, per se, and the consequences of a violation of the provisions of the law on the subject, are those only which are prescribed. None of the acts of the Legislature, prior to the act of 1849, in terms, conferred power upon the Courts in an action at law, not only to enforce the penalty, but to adjudge that the violation be taken down and removed or abated. Some of them contained a provision, declaring the violation a common nuisance, and authorized the Courts on indictment and conviction to abate and remove them. (Act April 9, 1813; Sec. 60, 62, 73. Act April 11, 1855; Sec. 2, 4, 5. Act April 12, 1822; Sec. 3, 4. Act April 9, 1823; Sec. 2. Act March 21, 1827; Sec. 2. Act May 1, 1829; Sec. 2. Act April 20, 1830; Sec. 16, 22. Act April 30, 1839; Sec. 8.)

This action, if determined by the judgment asked, was not one in use where the Constitution of 1846 was adopted, nor was the provision violated contained in any statute in existence at that time. It is true that the common law remedy by writ of nuisance was retained subject to the provisions of the statute. (2 Rev. Statute, 863, second edition.) In that proceeding the Jury, if the Court so ordered, could view the premises, and if the plaintiff prevailed the judgment followed that the nuisance be removed, and that he recover his damages. So in all actions founded upon damages resulting from a nuisance, the trial by Jury prevailed. There was a distinction, however, between a common and a private nuisance. On account of the former no action would lie by an individual unless he suffered some extraordinary damage beyond the rest of the people, or some peculiar or special injury, in which case he should have a private satisfaction by action. (3 Bl. Com. 220, Lansing vs. Smith; 4 Wen. 9 per Walworth, J.; Willard's Eq. In. 389; Pennman vs. N. Y. Balance Co., 13 Howard P. Rep. 40; Hecker vs. Same, Ibid 549.)

The statute of 1849 is a remedial statute, in the nature of a police regulation, designed for the protection of life and property, and the penalties imposed for a violation of it are given to the Fire Department exclusively. The consequences of such violation may be highly penal. The accused, as we have seen, may be punished by fine and his property destroyed, when the proceeding is by indictment, and when by action the penalty may be recovered and the property destroyed. I do not think it necessary in disposing of the exception taken to consider how far it is affected by the Constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law, because I think it may be disposed of on the first constitutional right or privilege suggested. It is said by A. S. Johnson, J., in Wynehamer vs. The People, (3 Kernan, 426) in reference to the first part of Art. 1, Sec. 2 of the Constitution, viz.: "The trial by jury in all cases in which it has heretofore been used shall remain inviolate for ever," that the expression "in all cases in which it has heretofore been used" is generic. That it does not limit the right to the mere instances in which it had been used, but extends it to such new and like cases as might afterward arise, and illustrates this view by stating that felonies were tried by a Jury, and if a new felony were created, it must be tried in that way. The application of that principle disposes of the question in hand. A common nuisance is a misdemeanor, and indictable at common law (Wharton's Cr. Law, 4;) but the indictment was not triable in the Special Session (2 Rev. Stat., 711, sec. 1; 714, sec. 22;) and when an action was brought by an individual to recover damages resulting from a common nuisance, the action proceeded according to the course of the common law, and there was a trial by jury. The violation complained of in this action is declared a common nuisance, and the statute declaring it has not prescribed the mode of trial. The rule applicable to an individual for damages occasioned by a common nuisance would apply to a trial to recover a penalty imposed by the statute, at which the defendant would be entitled to a jury in a Justice's Court, if demanded (Act of 1818, vol. 2, Revised Laws, 370, sec. 95; 2 Rev. Stat., 242, sec. 93;) and, at all events, in a Court of Record proceeding according to the course of the common law; 2 Rev. Stat., 409, sec. 4. This action, then, regarded as one at law to recover a penalty or to remove a nuisance, is an addition to a class of offences and actions well known and defined, and in which the mode of trial was by jury, and was well-known and in use prior to the Constitution of 1846. It is no answer to the conclusion thus expressed that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction to restrain and abate a nuisance, and that having acquired jurisdiction for any purpose, that Court retained it generally. The power of the Court of Chancery to interfere in cases of nuisance cannot be doubted, although it is stated as an elementary rule that in many of the cases indictable as common nuisances courts of equity have no cognizance. (Willard's Equity, 389; Eden on Injunctions, 160;) and it seems that the relief in equity was confined to the restraint or abatement of the nuisance. A prayer for damages would be stricken out. (Brady vs. Weeks, 3 Bar. S. C. Rep. 157.) The Courts did not always interfere in cases of common nuisance. The Court of King's Bench in Rex vs. Justices of Dorset, 15 East 594, refused to interfere, and left the party to his remedy by indictment. These authorities are referred to not for the purpose of questioning the power of the Court of Chancery, where its interposition was asked in cases of nuisance, but to show that there was a distinction between common and private nuisances recognized in that Court. But conceding this power in cases of nuisance public and private, the history of that jurisdiction and all the cases wherein it was employed will show that it was exercised by injunction and on bills filed expressly for the purpose of obtaining that process. (Story's Eq., 2 vol., sec. 923, 924, 925; Eden on Injunctions, 157; Willard's Eq. Ju 388.) And there are no instances to be found in which the Court of Chancery has assumed jurisdiction to abate a nuisance, and decree a penalty or damages for its creation. As we have seen (Brady vs. Weeks, supra.,) the Supreme Court of this State, acting as a Court of Equity, struck out the prayer for damages as multifarious. I think it may also be said of this and kindred actions, that they are not in their nature such as would induce the interference of a Court of Equity. The plaintiffs have not suffered any injury, special or peculiar, and the building itself would not as such occasion injury to the plaintiffs. (Penniman vs. The New-York Balance Company; Hecker vs. Same, supra.) The nuisance is neither prejudicial to health nor offensive to the senses, and does not present any of the features of a nuisance known to equity or the common law. But without pursuing this view, there are considerations which claim our attention, and which arise from the pleadings and the statute in reference to which they were framed. The plaintiffs claim a penalty and the removal of the nuisance. They do not ask for an injunction and none in fact was necessary. The buildings had been erected when the action was commenced. The mischief was done, and there was no reason or ground for an injunction. An injunction would have accomplished nothing, and would not have been granted on the complaint. There was nothing to restrain. The action is in form, therefore—an action at law in which, by the statute, the plaintiffs are entitled, on proving the complaint, to double relief, viz: judgment for the penalty claimed, and that the nuisance be removed. The complaint does not seek the aid of equity jurisdiction, and there is nothing in the case which calls for its interposition. The judgment demanded and rendered would not have been granted by a Court of Equity prior to the Constitution of 1846.

There is nothing in the complaint and nothing in the case which in either branch of it necessarily forms the ground of equity jurisdiction, and when that is the case the right of trial by jury is absolute and cannot be denied, (Greason vs. Keteltas, 17 N. Y. Rep., 491,) while the whole scope of the action is certainly not equity cognizance. Having thus considered the complaint and the case made, if we turn to the statute of 1849, supra, we find that the power to restrain in these cases thereby given is not conferred upon the Supreme Court and this Court as courts of equity, but in addition to the power already possessed to enforce the penalty; which power to enforce the penalty was to be exercised according to the course of the common law, and by which course a jury trial was a right secured. The language of the statute shows that the intention of the Legislature was to confer upon the Courts named a special jurisdiction in actions to be brought by the plaintiffs for the recovery of the penalties imposed for violations of its provisions. If the penalty was in fact incurred, then the statute was violated, and a common nuisance proved to have been created. The Court might then direct the building to be removed. The inquiry as to the penalty would necessarily determine the question of nuisance, and thus present to the Court all the elements requisite for the judgment to be given. This comprehensive provision as to the judgment to be granted did not change the character of the action, but enlarged the relief to be granted. My conclusions are therefore as follows:

1. That although prior to the Constitution of 1846, a Court of Equity had jurisdiction in cases of nuisance, and although this Court possesses general law and equity jurisdiction, the complaint herein does not, by any averment made or relief asked, seek the aid of equity jurisdiction.

2. That in these actions this Court acts as a Court of law exclusively.

3. That if it does not so act, then this action is in form an action at law; and

4. That in either point of view the defendant was entitled to a trial by jury on the issues presented.

The judgment should therefore be reversed.

FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE—RECORDING ACT.

Ellison vs. Pecare.—(Supreme Court, General Term.)—The facts in this case appear in the opinion.

PRATT, J.—This is an action to foreclose a mortgage upon premises sold in separate parcels to different purchasers, subsequent to the execution of the mortgage. The question now in litigation arises between the defendants. Pecare and Hesser claiming under different deeds of conveyance in regard to the order in which the different parcels of the mortgaged premises shall be sold. The conveyance under which Pecare claims was first in the order of time executed and delivered, whilst Hesser's deed was first put upon record. Both defendants aver, in their answer, that they had no knowledge of the mortgage at the time of their purchase, and both conveyances contained full covenants of warranty. The Court, at Special Term, adjudged that Hesser, who had his deed first recorded, had the prior equity.

It is a well acknowledged principle of equity, that the first purchaser of a portion of premises, subject to a prior mortgage, is entitled to have the remainder of the premises sold first to satisfy the mortgage. But this is a mere equity, and is not an interest in lands, which is subject to the provisions of the recording act. The recording act, ex propria vigore, cannot affect such a case. It is possible that through the actual notice which a person might receive by means of the record of a deed or mortgage, his equity might be lost; but nothing of that kind is claimed in this case.

In this case, the party under whom Pecare holds, was by his purchase invested with an equity to have the holder of the mortgage, in the first place, exhaust his remedy against the unsold portion of the lot before resorting to that conveyed to him. Now, how has he been divested of such equity? He lost nothing by the mere fact of not having his deed recorded, for the statute does not apply to an interest of this kind. If he has lost it all, it must be in consequence of some actual equity, with which some one else has become invested superior to his.

But Hesser avers, in his answer, that he did not know of the mortgage at the time of the purchase. If that be so, it would have made no difference with him if Pecare's deed had been on record. I am, therefore, utterly unable to perceive how he has any equity superior to Pecare's, and the latter being prior in point of time, takes precedence.

It is not necessary to decide what would have been the result if Hesser had known of the mortgage, and had consequently examined the record to see if any other portion of the premises had been sold, and finding no record of any other conveyance, had been induced to buy, supposing, in good faith, that he was the first purchaser. In such case there would have been some show of equity, whether superior to that of Pecare or not it is not necessary to declare. In this case there is no pretence of his being misled by the want of this record, or that his condition is in any wise different from what it would be if the deed had been recorded.

The judgment should, therefore, be modified in accordance with the finding of the referee, with the costs to be paid by Hesser.

RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEES AND MORTGAGEES—AMENDMENTS.

Baker vs. Seely—(Supreme Court, Special Term.)—The facts of this case appear in the opinion which we give in full:

DAVIES, J.—The facts as they appeared on the trial of the cause are substantially as follows: Seely, the defendant, was the owner and holder of certain promissory notes of one Baldwin, and among them a note for $1,000, dated Oct. 29, 1855, payable 22 months from date, and which was payable to Seely's order. The payment of this note and others was secured to Seely by a chattel mortgage executed by Baldwin to him, and which chattel mortgage Seely held on the 9th of September, 1857. Seely indorsed the note, and deposited it in the Citizens' Bank, where it was payable, and on the 1st of September, 1857, it was protested for non-payment, and after such protest an agent of the maker, Baldwin, called at the Bank and paid the amount of it and took the note. Such agent then applied to the plaintiffs for an advance of money upon the note, representing that it was secured by a chattel mortgage to the defendant, Seely. The plaintiffs made application to Seely to ascertain the truth of this representation, and proved it to be so.

On the 9th of September, 1857, the defendant made and executed to the plaintiffs an assignment in the words following:

"For value received I hereby sell, assign, and set over unto Cornelius Baker & Son, that certain promissory note made by Andrew H. Baldwin, payable on the 1st day of September, 1857, for one thousand dollars, and to which a certain chattel mortgage upon the lease and furniture of the National Hotel in Cortlandt-street, New-York, is held as collateral, and which mortgage, to the extent of said note, is hereby assigned to said C. Baker & Son.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 9, 1857. GEO. SEELY."

The plaintiffs, upon the delivery to them of said note, protest and assignment, proceeded upon the faith thereof to make an advance to them, and advanced the sum of $950.

Seely, the mortgagee, subsequently proceeded to foreclose the chattel mortgage, and collected the amount of the mortgage.

The plaintiffs in the complaint as originally framed, prayed for the appointment of a Receiver of the property covered by the chattel mortgage, and a sale of sufficient to pay the amount due to them. Under this complaint, as thus presented, it is clear that all necessary parties were not before the Court, and the grounds of objection taken in the learned and able arguments of the counsel for the defendants, would necessarily be sustained.

But I think the case a very simple and plain one on the facts proved on the trial, and that it is my duty under section 173 of the Code, in furtherance of justice, to permit the pleadings to be amended to conform to the facts proved. (Dunchy vs. Tyler, 15 Howe, 399,) is ample authority for the necessary amendments in this case.

How then stands the case? There is no question that the plaintiff in good faith made the advances to Baldwin on the representations that the note was secured by the chattel mortgage, and the assignment by defendant of a sufficient interest in the mortgage to secure the note. I think the defendant is estopped from saying that this note had then been paid and the chattel mortgage extinguished pro tanto. He in effect, by the assignment of it to plaintiff, represented it as a vital existing note; at any rate he and Baldwin reissued it, and it is not competent for them to say here that it had in fact been paid and the mortgage to that extent extinguished. It may be true that the plaintiff supposed that the note had not in fact been paid by Baldwin, and that the moneys the plaintiffs were to advance were to be applied to the reimbursement of the moneys paid at the Bank to take up the note. Such mistake or misapprehension on his part cannot affect the rights of the plaintiffs. It is not pretended that they were parties to the fraud, if any, practiced on the defendant. They advanced their moneys in good faith upon these securities; and the defendant having proceeded and collected the mortgage, a portion of which, or an interest in which, he had assigned to the plaintiffs for a valuable consideration, I cannot see upon what principle he can be excused from accounting for the moneys thus collected. He was the trustee of the plaintiffs to the extent of their interest in the mortgage, and having collected the amounts secured by it, he is on every principle bound to account to them for the extent of their interests; that is, the sum advanced by them on the note and assignments, $950, and interest from the date of such advances.

Judgment will therefore be entered for the plaintiffs for that sum and interest, and the costs of this suit to be adjusted.

WHEN ALIMONY, PENDING SUIT, WILL BE DENIED.

Clements vs. Clements.—(Supreme Court Chambers.)—This was an application for an order directing defendant (in a divorce suit by wife against husband) to pay a sum for counsel fees and expenses of litigation.

ROOSEVELT, J.—The plaintiff, a widow recently married the second time, having commenced a suit for separation, applies for an order directing her husband to furnish her with the necessary means for carrying it on. As the granting of such application is not a matter of course in all cases, the Court, when they are presented, is called upon, provisionally at least, to look into the whole merits of the controversy. These at present can only be judged of by the affidavits, which in some respects are exceedingly contradictory, but in others are sufficiently harmonious to enable the Court to decide the motion.

There is no dispute that the parties when they married had both arrived at the years of discretion, the one being a widow of forty-eight and the other a widower of three score; that they were both sorely disappointed in their respective anticipations; that they flew apart almost as soon as they came together, and that a suit of separation was the premature and first-born fruit of their union.

The groom, although a doctor, was a feeble invalid, needing and seeking for a nurse to his declining years; the bride, although strong, robust and powerful, had an inclination, it may be inferred, to live as a lady on "the $60,000 and more," of which she was "informed and believed" her intended was "the owner." They accordingly got married on the 10th day of the new year, and in less than a week their mutual delusions—his, certainly—were most unhappily and thoroughly dissipated. No actual outbreak, however, occurred till the 26th of January. On the night of that day, according to her statement, the honeymoon being only half over, he commenced while in bed to deliver himself of a curtain lecture on the undue consumption of coal and candles in a style of vituperation, the precise language of which she professes to quote, and with tones and gestures creating in her fear of great bodily harm. This scene, according to her account, was followed by several others of a like character until the plaintiff with her daughter, a grown-up young lady of over 21 years, left the defendant's house.

It is to be observed that the defendant denies under oath all the charges made against him, and, on the other hand, accuses his newly-married bride with a fault-finding, noisy and turbulent disposition, and an utter neglect of her domestic duties; tearing his hair, punching his sides with her fists, and threatening with a glass lamp to beat his brains out. He ascribes much of her alleged ill-humor to the unexpected discovery that, instead of $60,000, as in her fond dreams she had supposed he was worth, apart from his profession, his property did not exceed $5,000; a falling off in her connubial hopes well calculated to disturb the serenity of a widow of forty-eight. As, however, she does not allege that the defendant in this matter ever deceived her, the disappointment furnished no ground of complaint against him. On a view of all the affidavits on both sides, I think it is obvious that there are mutual faults, and that the probabilities are that the defendant may succeed on the trial in establishing a quasi counter claim against the plaintiff, sufficient, and perhaps more than sufficient, to balance the account of the difficulties between them.

It would be unjust, therefore, at this stage of the suit, to make him furnish means, not only for defending, but for assailing himself—especially as the plaintiff is shown to have frequently declared that she had sufficient property of her own derived from her former husband.

Motion for order on defendant to pay counsel fees and other expenses to carry on the litigation denied.

GENERAL MARKETS.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, June 18, 1859—6 P. M.

The reported receipts of the principal kinds of Produce, since our last, have been: 49 bbls Ashes, 13,915 bbls. Flour, 1,502 bushels Wheat, 41,010 bushels Oats, 2,058 pkgs. Provisions, 617 bbls. Whisky.

Southern Flour has been in limited demand to-day, at languid prices; sales have been reported of 850 bbls., in lots, at $7 10@$7 45 for mixed brands, and $7 50@$9 25 for low fancy to very choice extra brands, ℔ bbl. Rye Flour continues quite dull, at $3 90@$5 for fine and superfine, ℔ bbl. Corn Meal is in moderate request; $4 10@$4 15 for Jersey, and $4 50 for Brandywine, ℔ bbl.

GRAIN—Wheat continues inactive, owing to the disagreement of buyers and sellers about prices. The former claim a material reduction, which the latter refuse to make; sales have been confined to small lots, including poor White Western, at $1 56; inferior white Southern, at $1 50; and good White Kentucky, at $1 82@$1 83½ ℔ bushel. Corn is depressed and lower. Sales have been reported of only 16,000 bushels; 84c.@88c. for ordinary to choice yellow Northern and Jersey; 85c.@88c. for yellow Southern; 84c.@87c. for white Southern; and 81c.@84c. for inferior to choice old and new mixed Western ℔ bushel; Rye continues dull and heavy at 93c.@96c. ℔ bushel. Barley is quiet and somewhat nominal. 1,500 bushels California changed hands on private terms. Oats are plenty and heavy. Canada, 50c.@52c.; Western, 50c.@52c.; State, 48c.@51c.; Jersey and Pennsylvania, 44c.@48c.; Southern, 42c.@46c.

HAY—Sales: 1,000 bales North River, at 55c.@65c. ℔ 100 lbs.

HIDES—Dry Hides have been in good demand; but the firmness with which they have been held has tended to restrict business. Dry Salted hides have been more sought after. Wet Salted hides are in light supply and lively request. Upper Leather Stock is moderately abundant, and desirable lots, which are inquired for more freely, are held higher. Messrs. H. D. HULL & Co. state that the week's receipts have been 49,961 hides from foreign ports, as follows: 18,029 Dry Buenos Ayres and Montevideo, 743 Salted do., 2,315 Salted do. Horse, ex Parana, Burdett Hart and Yankee Blade; 4,851 Rosario, ex Ann Elizabeth; 4,094 Savanilla, &c., ex *Thos. NEWS OF THE DAY.

The intelligence from the seat of war in Italy, which we this morning lay before the reader, is of the very highest interest. By the arrival of the Anglo-Saxon at Quebec, we learn that on the 4th inst. the main bodies of the hostile armies came in contact at Magenta, in Lombardy, about two miles from the Ticino; and that after a contest protracted through two days, the Austrians, numbering somewhere about 140,000 men, were defeated by the allied French and Sardinians, numbering nearly 110,000. In this dreadful encounter the Austrians are reported to have lost 27,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners, while the loss of the French was only 3,000. The French have many officers on the list of killed and wounded. General ESPINASSE is reported as dead, and Marshal CANROBERT as mortally injured. The chief honors of the action appear to have fallen to General MAURICE MCMAHON, commanding the second corps d'armée, who on the field was created Marshal and Duke of MAGENTA. The Austrians had retreated upon Pavia. We have, at the same time, the gratifying intelligence that Milan, the seat and capital of traditional Austrian tyranny in Lombardy, had risen in revolt, and that the Austrian forces occupying the place had evacuated the city and the citadel with such precipitation as to leave their artillery, stores and treasures behind them. GARIBALDI had left Lecca and was probably following up D'URBAN who, with his Austrian command, was retreating toward Mouza. The only matters of interest we receive from England by this arrival is the royal speech upon the organization of Parliament, and the programme of the Liberals for the displacement of the Ministry. The motion of want of confidence was under discussion.

JONATHAN TROTTER, formerly Mayor of Brooklyn and President of our Board of Aldermen, has been appointed the successor of Mr. DELAVAN as Collector of Assessments.

The recent fining of liquor dealers for selling on Sundays, had the effect yesterday of inducing some of them to close up. The German lager-bier saloons, however, were in full blast.

During a disturbance in Cherry-street early yesterday morning, Officer MCCRACKEN, of the Fourth Precinct, was stabbed in the side—though not severely—by a man, named JOHN SULLIVAN. The affair amounted to a riot, and a platoon of policemen maintained the peace with much difficulty.

The first weekly report of the new City Inspector shows an increase of thirty-eight in the number of deaths over the preceding week. There is no cause for alarm, however, in this phenomenon. It is only an evidence, probably, of greater care and correctness in making up the bills of mortality. The whole number of deaths, according to the report for the week ending Saturday, the 18th inst. was 398. Of the whole number, there were 89 men, 61 women, 138 boys and 110 girls.

In the Superior Court at General Term, the decision of the Court in the famous libel suit of Fry vs. Bennett was announced. It will be remembered that on the second trial of this cause, FRY recovered a verdict of $7,000—the jury on the first trial having awarded $10,000. The defendant moved for a third trial, on the ground that the plaintiff's counsel was allowed to comment to the jury on matters not in evidence. The General Term affirm the order of the Special Term, denying the motion for a new trial.

A man, whose name is unknown, accidentally fell into the East River, last evening, from a sloop containing a party on a pleasure excursion. He was intoxicated, and sank before assistance could reach him, notwithstanding a boat was promptly sent from the ferry-boat Fulton, and another from the sloop.

On Saturday Flour was rather more sought after, but at reduced prices. Grain was in slack demand, though buyers had any existing advantage. Provisions were depressed. Cotton was partially neglected. Coffee, Molasses, Naval Stores, Oils, Rice and Tallow, were inactive. Sugars were in good demand, and were quoted somewhat firmer. Freights were quiet. The total number of vessels of all classes in port was 627.

A PROPHECY SOON FULFILLED.—We predicted on Saturday morning, that among the first results of Mr. DELAVAN'S induction into office as City Inspector would be a considerable increase in the weekly bills of mortality, as shown by the reports from his office. We have heretofore alluded to the very remarkable phenomenon of a considerable decrease in the bills of mortality, as compared with those of last year, though the sanitary conditions of the City were, if possible, worse now than then, and the population of the City was, as shown by the Directory, greater by some 35,000 than last year, and the amount of foreign immigration was much greater. It was impossible not to arrive at the conclusion, that the statistics of the Inspector's office must be grossly incorrect, either from design, or from very culpable carelessness. There would be no reason for alarm, therefore, even though it should appear that the mortality of the City had suddenly increased some ten per cent. The increase would only be evidence of greater efficiency in the department. The first report of the new City Inspector verifies our prediction in a very striking manner. Mr. DELAVAN has not been in a week, and his very first Report, on Saturday, exhibits an increase in the mortality of the City of 38 over the week previous. This may seem a strange subject for congratulation, but we must regard it as an indication that a reform movement has already commenced in the City Inspector's office. New brooms are proverbial for sweeping clean, but the new brooms of the City Inspectorship have not heretofore maintained their character.

The Battle of Magenta—Six Weeks of War.

The telegraphic news which reaches America with each successive steamer is generally vague, inexact and blundering, in a precise ratio with its importance. After perusing the account, which we this morning publish, of the battle fought at Magenta on the 3d and 4th of June, and sifting the positive intelligence from the gossip of London and Paris, and the "latest reports" of pot-house papers, like the London Advertiser, with which the telegraph has so obligingly favored us, the reader, we think, will be inclined to echo the famous exclamation of Prince Hal over Falstaff's tavern bill. The thing is annoying, but perhaps unavoidable, and certainly irreparable, at least till the arrival of the mails now due by the Ocean Queen.

Setting aside, however, the speculations of the British Press as to what had been done, and who had done it; and the surmises of the Boulevards as to how many men had killed how many; and the bombshells of extraordinary news discharged from Vienna into the camp of the German Confederation at Frankfort, we can make out clearly at least four facts of the highest importance: That the French army, commanded by the Emperor in person, crossed the Ticino in its march upon Milan on the 2d of June; that on the 3d, 4th, and 5th of June it encountered the Austrian army posted at Magenta to dispute its advance; that a furious conflict followed, the result of which was the retreat of the Austrians southward in the direction of Abbiate Grasso and Pavia; and that Milan having been evacuated by the Austrians, a deputation from that city waited upon VICTOR EMANUEL on the 6th of June, in the presence of NAPOLEON III., and requested him to take possession of the Capital of Lombardy. These facts, in and of themselves, are abundantly sufficient to establish the victory of the allied arms, and hardly need the additional confirmation afforded by the splendid distinctions with which General MACMAHON was invested on the battle-field by the French Emperor. Upon the probable results of this magnificent triumph it is, perhaps, premature for us to speculate; but, in the reported advance of GARIBALDI from Lecco upon General D'URBAN'S corps, and in the known disposition of the force under the command of Prince NAPOLEON to the south of the Po, there is much to confirm us in the belief that the French Emperor has resolved to make his campaign in Italy a campaign of fire as well as of the sword; and that he is nobly bearing out his promise, made to the world, by putting Italy herself forward in every direction as the leading actor in her own deliverance. By the previous arrival of the Europa, the usually well-informed correspondent of the London Daily News, a journal which has signalized itself throughout the whole of the pending European crisis by its earnest and impartial advocacy of liberal interests and the cause of European freedom, reported the Austrians in full retreat across the Ticino on the 1st of June. His report is now fully confirmed. On the 1st of June the Fourth French Corps d'Armée under General NIEL occupied Novara, distant six miles from the river and from the bridge of Buffalora, over which the Austrians had passed in force on their invasion of Piedmont just a month before, exulting in the prospect of the speedy plunder of Turin. The desperate attempts made by the Austrian main body on the 1st and 2d of June at Palestro, to delay the passage of the Sesia by the Allies, had succeeded only so far as to allow time for the escape of a considerable portion of the Austrian force into Lombardy, by the bridge of Vigevano, eight miles further down the river than the bridge of Buffalora.

Between Vigevano, and Sesto Calende at the emergence of the Ticino from the Lake Maggiore, the river, which throughout its whole course is swift, deep and navigable, is crossed by five bridges—one, which we have called that of Vigevano, spanning the stream about three miles northeast of that town, on the road between Orseno and Abbiate Grasso; another carrying the direct road from Novara to Milan by Galliate, across the river a mile from Buffalora; another, about three miles higher up, at Turbigo; a fourth, connecting Oleggio, on the Sardinian side, with Pozzuolo on the Lombard; and a fifth, about two miles below Sesto Calende, on the way to Somma. Of these bridges the two northernmost were in the power of the Allies by the 1st of June. The bridges of Buffalora and Turbigo were therefore the points at which the French advance was obliged, on the 2d and 3d, to wrest a passage from the Austrians; and at these points the battle of Magenta may accordingly be said to have begun.

The road from Buffalora passes directly on by way of San Stefano and San Pietro to Milan, a distance of about fifteen miles, through a rich, plain country intersected by numerous canals, the banks of which are lined with tall Lombardy poplars. Buffalora itself stands, not upon the Ticino as is commonly suppposed, but upon one of the widest of these canals, called the Sforzesca. Just below Buffalora another Canal, the Cavo Langosco, branches from the Sforzesca and runs south to the Naviglio Grande, a great canal which passes from Abbiate Grasso to the capital of Lombardy. This canal of Langosco is crossed about three miles south of Buffalora by a fine bridge, called the Ponte di Magenta, from the town of Magenta, a place of some 4,000 inhabitants, lying at a distance of less than a mile to the east of this bridge, and at about the same distance to the south of the town of Marcallo on the road from Buffalora to Milan.

This hasty sketch of the topography of the scene of action will perhaps enable the reader to form to himself some idea of the probable course of the conflicts of the 3d and 4th of June.

The Austrians, who are said to have been commanded by Marshal HESS—and the great ability with which their troops must have been handled since the allied advance began, goes far to confirm the assertion—must have been withdrawn in great numbers into Lombardy by the bridge of Vigevano or Abbiate Grasso before the fighting began at the bridges of Buffalora and Turbigo. While the contest was going on there, Austrian troops were rapidly moved up along the Sforzesca and the Langosco canals, and by Magenta, to intercept the advance on Milan should the Allies succeed in passing the river. That Marshal HESS should have succeeded in bringing his army out of the position into which Count GYULAI had led it, so far as to enable him to undertake such a daring manœuvre as this, is a high testimony to his skill as a commander. But skillful and daring as his movements seem to hav been, those of his Imperial antagonist would appear to have been not less so. That the effort to arrest the allied march failed after two days of the most severe fighting is proved by the evacuation of Milan; that the fighting had not yet ceased ought to be sufficiently explained by the consideration that until the Austrians had either been driven in utter rout into the Naviglio Grande, or had succeeded in putting that water between themselves and the Allies, and in so securing their retreat to Pavia, it would be impossible for the Allies to move with safety upon Milan. The real field of such a battle, as this of Magenta must have been, is not the triangle described by the towns of Magenta, Robecco and Buffalora, but the larger triangle of which the Naviglio Grande is the base line, and which is described between Milan, Abbiate Grasso, and Buffalora.

Whether the Austrians should be suffered to fall back in safety upon Pavia itself, even after passing the base-line of this triangle, would depend, of course, upon the comparative strength of their army with that of the Allies actually in Lombardy, as well as upon the movements of the French reserve in Alessandria and Casale, and also upon the actual extent of the insurrections in Lombardy. Upon the effect of such a victory as this of Magenta, followed up by the triumphant entry of VICTOR EMANUEL and NAPOLEON III. into Milan, in rousing not Lombardy alone, but all Northern and Central Italy into fiery revolution, the allied commanders may well rely with confidence. They are fast lighting the Italian magazine on every side of the Austrian forces, and it is by no means clear that the fortified square of the Adige itself will long afford a refuge for the Imperial dominion of Austria, from the reduplicated explosions that now menace her power.

Upon the rest of Europe, the progress of the liberating armies is likely to exert a wholesome influence in crushing any disposition that may exist toward generalizing the war.

The Queen of England, if she has said nothing else in her speech from the throne, has at least re-affirmed her resolution not to interfere in the Italian contest, while the Czar has at last spoken out his mind with unmistakable emphasis to the lesser German courts by declaring that should they meddle in this matter, Russia will consider the "equilibrium of Europe" as endangered, and herself of course as at liberty to restore the balance with her weighty sword.

To have urged matters on to this point within six weeks time of the opening of the contest, is a triumph of skill, foresight, and energy on the part of the French Emperor for which his warmest admirers can hardly have been prepared.

Austria and the War.

It is now so long since the world has seen anything in the way of martial activity and actual warfare at all comparable to the strife now waging in Italy, that we have thought it worth while to draw up a brief catalogue raisonnée of some of the most famous battles of the last fifty years, as a standard by which our readers may more accurately measure in their own minds the terrible importance of a conflict which hurls such masses of human beings, scientific machinery, wealth, strength and courage, one upon another, for the purpose of mutual destruction.

They will thus too learn to judge more sternly and therefore more justly, the true nature of that despotic policy which has deliberately invited all this fearful slaughter, with its incalculable consequent misery, simply to preserve a foreign dominion over races which insist upon independence, and to strengthen a foreign throne among a people who cannot be loyal to their sovereign without being false to themselves.

The dread reality of war has at least this merit, that it breaks up in an instant the cobwebs which diplomacy and discussion always weave about a great question, and flashes the fierce truth upon the vision of mankind.

While the armies in Italy were marching and counter-marching, and going through with the vast manœuvring necessary to bring forces so immense fairly face to face with one another upon the battle-field, the world could still spend its time in listening to the wise-acres who kept suggesting so many excellent reasons for suspecting the motives of the French Emperor, or the objects of the Sardinian King, or the deep designs of the Czar of Russia. But now that the news, for the first time in forty years, reaches us, that armies amounting in numbers to the whole population of great cities, are tearing each other to pieces with shot and shell, with sabre and bayonet, and that the struggles of a single field have prostrated as many men in the vigor of life as make up the activity and create the prosperity of Boston or of Baltimore, the moral sense of mankind will pass at once to the core of the matter, and find that the Austrian Emperor, who has preferred that all this should come to pass, rather than the rule of Lombardy and Venice be transferred from his own hands to those of the people over whom he wields it, must forever stand out from the history of the nineteenth century as the branded type and incarnation of that savage feudal spirit which held the burgher and the peasant to be the natural appanage of the sovereign and the noble.

The Emperor of Austria has falsely claimed to appear in Italy as the chief of the Lombardo-Venetian people. The first check received by his arms aroused the only parts of Lombardo-Venetia not occupied by his troops into open revolt. The first great defeat sustained by his ablest commander has driven his soldiers and his authority forth in flight from the ancient capital of the Lombard kingdom.

Whatever may be thought of the system by which NAPOLEON III. rules in France, that system has at least been sanctioned by successive appeals to the people of France themselves. The Emperor of Austria has never so much as dreamt of daring to subject his rights in Italy to a like criterion. Were he to do so, he knows that all the soldiers under arms in his pay, or, as we should rather say, on his books, from Piacenza to Cracow, would not suffice to compel his name into the ballot-boxes of Lombardy and Venice. The rights for which Austria is now flooding Italy with blood—the blood of her own ignorant subjects as well as of those who owe her no allegiance—are rights which it is too late to ask the world to respect. They are such rights as GEORGE III., of England, believed himself to hold over the thirteen Colonies of America; and when the armies of an absolute Sovereign of France aided those colonies to force upon the most respectable and the most stupid of the kings of the House of GUELPH a stinging recognition of his profound mistake, we have no doubt that many of his worthy British subjects were as much puzzled to understand how a "despot" could fight for liberty as their descendants now are to comprehend the Napoleonic policy in Italy.

But the French, nevertheless, helped the Americans to beat the royal troops of England into impotency and their master into submission, and the sooner the French can now help the Italians to do the same severe but wholesome office by the Austrians and FRANCIS JOSEPH, the better it will be for the whole world beside.

Mazzini on Italy.

No man who has ever taken up the cause of Italy can claim credit for greater zeal, sincerity, and disinterestedness than MAZZINI. Many others have suffered more in her behalf than he, because it has been his singular good fortune to have eluded the grasp of his enemy, for nearly thirty years of exile, rebellion, and conspiracy. But he has undergone everything in her service save imprisonment and the scaffold. Loss of home, loss of friends loss of fortune, perils by land and perils by sea, perils from foreigners and perils from his own countrymen, have been his lot during the greater part of his life. Enthusiasm, which neither advancing years nor continued reverses can dampen; a faith to which delay only adds fresh fire; moral courage, which no obstacles nor opposition, nor misapprehension can abate, a loyalty to conviction worthy of any martyr who ever perished in the amphitheatre, are qualities which give any man indisputable titles to respect, and MAZZINI possesses them all. When such a man talks about a subject, to the study and furtherance of which his whole life has been devoted, he may well be listened to with attention; and so when MAZZINI discourses upon what is now passing in Italy, no one can help giving his ideas some consideration.

He has recently published in his paper in London an address to the Italians, which possesses, independently of the value of its theories and its arguments, a somewhat melancholy interest, from the fact that it is the protest of a man who has just found himself deserted by his whole party, and who, after standing for a quarter of a century at the head of the Italian movement, finds that when Italy is at last laboring in the throes of a great crisis she will have nothing to say to him or his teachings. MAZZINI has so long represented Italian liberalism in the eyes of foreign nations, and has this year been so unceremoniously thrust aside by his quondam disciples, that people are naturally anxious to know what explanation he has to offer of so extraordinary a phenomenon as his own deposition. They want to know how it is that he, who ten years ago believed, and made the world believe, that all Italy was at his back, now finds no one in Italy to take a single item of his advice upon such a momentous theme as the means of achieving the national independence.

We are sorry to say that his last manifesto throws no light on the mystery. How it is that the Italy which he insisted not very long ago was all republican, should now rally to a man under the standard of an Emperor or a King; how it is that the Liberal party which, as he assured us, was so disgusted by the treason and cowardice of Sardinia in 1849, that the House of Savoy has ever since been the object of its special detestation, should now call on VICTOR EMANUEL to lead it against the common enemy—are matters which he does not give himself the trouble to explain. He reiterates with a constancy which few can help admiring, his old denunciations of kings and of foreign aid; his old eulogies upon conspiracy and insurrection, but on the point on which our curiosity is most strongly excited—he says not one word.

The fact is—a fact which MAZZINI himself cannot deny—that the Italians have given his system a fair trial, during a period of nearly forty years. He has recommended secret associations. They have formed and maintained a secret association of monstrous proportions, admirably organized, and, so far as any such body can be efficient, wonderfully efficient. It has kept its counsels, spread its ramifications over all parts of the peninsula, defied the police, the dungeon and the scaffold, and made every monarch in Europe tremble on his throne. It has supplied MAZZINI with agents, emissaries and martyrs in unparalleled abundance. He recommended detached insurrections, and detached insurrections accordingly broke out every year at his orders. The Italian youth, by dozens, by twenties, by hundreds, rose at his command, killed a few soldiers, and were duly shot and hanged immediately after. He recommended a general rising in 1849, and the whole country rose accordingly. They drove out the Austrians, drove out the Pope, drove out the King of Naples, and, even when the tide began to turn, exhibited the highest qualities of soldiership in the defence of their fortified places. But they were unable to maintain themselves against enormous forces of regular troops, and again succumbed in due course. After their repeated failures, after nearly half a century of patient, conscientious, unflinching experiment, they have resolved to try something else. They have discovered that the Mazzinian mode of treatment has not produced the slightest modification of their symptoms, and have resolved to try another physician. He berates them soundly for their desertion of him, and assures them that it is far better not to be cured at all than not be cured in the particular way which he prescribes.

From the moment, that in 1849, VICTOR EMANUEL'S righteous and noble adherence to the Constitution opened one spot in Italy where a man might speak of Italian wrongs, Italian unity and freedom, without running any risk of the prison or the bastinado. MAZZINI'S influence began to decline. As soon as the Italians found a place in which to argue their cause in hearing of the world, secret associations lost their value and their power. No man wanted to go masked to a dark room and mumble in whispers about the welfare of the country, when there were Italian cities in which he might speak his mind in the face of day. During ten years, under circumstances of great difficulty and great peril, Sardinia has kept this asylum open, has created and fostered public opinion in Italy and made it racy of the soil, and as the reward of it all, Italian Liberals have unanimously put her at the head of their party. MAZZINI has, however, been too long trained in "dark and hidden ways," to give in his adhesion to a policy which needs neither oath nor password nor countersign. He has conspired so long that any other mode of delivering Italy actually seems to him chimerical and absurd; and he has so long been in the habit of cautiously veiling his projects from kings, that the idea of taking a king into the national councils seems to him a symptom of lunacy. We cannot blame him for loyalty to his own views of right, but we must blame him for desiring a whole people to sacrifice themselves for the sake of enabling him to protract his experimentation. The gloomy grandeur with which he sits apart from the present struggle and sings Cassandra strains over the folly of his countrymen, bears a far stronger resemblance to the unscrupulousness of the fanatic than the wisdom of the philosopher.

Blind Investments.

A few days since, several prominent holders of railway shares in the City of Albany received an anonymous circular, to the effect that private "warnings" had come from Europe portending a fall in the securities of three or four specified railroads to the amount of twenty per cent.

The communication in question is zoologically denounced by the Albanians as "a bear circular," and its author stigmatized by a bold metaphor as an "assassin of value." He could, however, scarcely prove an "assassin," otherwise than in the evil of his intent; for so overt a device was unlikely to deceive any of the "citizens of financial prominence" to whom the note was addressed. But there are multitudes of no "prominence" who hold railway shares and bonds—chiefly the shares—who can form no intelligent opinion of the intrinsic value of their stock, and who, consequently, are liable to be alarmed by tricks as silly as the one in question. They know, indeed, that they receive a certain dividend, large or small—in most cases large, where any dividend at all is paid—and that the per centage declared is usually the same from year to year, whatever the receipts of the road may have been. That such a state of things may be permanent they have some faith, born of more hope. Yet they cannot but observe that the market-price of their stock, no matter how "prominent" the road may be, rarely bears any decent relation to the dividends awarded. If they reflect at all, they must see that they have made their investments blindly. Had their money been paid for land, or horses, or mortgages on real estate, or State stocks, they could be at no loss in estimating the amount of value received. Not so in regard to railway shares. Property invested in railways, and especially in large railways, like the New-York Central and the Erie, must be controlled by men beyond the reach of most of the holders; lines of policy are pursued which are past finding out by nine in ten of those most interested; and, in a word, a general system of secret despotism is established, which the hapless stockholders are apparently powerless either to understand or to resist. The President of the Road is their Sultan; they his mutes, bound to bowstring one another at his nod. It is therefore natural that the mass of stockholders should be easily imposed upon. They are as timid as children in the dark. Nothing but the light can make them sensible, for nothing but the light can make them free.

The discredit brought upon our financial reputation abroad, and upon our general interests, by the perpetual fluctuation of our leading railway values, has given this matter a public, almost a national importance. It has become the affair of the Press, and must be dealt with by the Press. It is quite time that the whole question of railway property and railway management in America should be taken up, sifted and brought to a solution. The mystics of the railway managements may as well understand at once that the day of reckoning for them is at hand.

THE POLITICAL QUESTION OF THE DAY.—Did the Democratic State Committee meet on Wednesday last or did it not? That is the question. The Hards take the affirmative; the Softs hold the negative. For the arguments pro and con see the "organs," passim. It is asserted and reasserted by the Hards that not only did such meeting take place, in Mr. CAGGER'S office, but that Ex-Governor HORATIO SEYMOUR was present.

The Hards are prodigies at making a noise. What they lack is numbers. There are really next to none of them left, and the small remainder will be swallowed up before next Fall. Who believes that there can be half a dozen Hunker delegates in the next Democratic State Convention? With all their clamor and professions of devotion to the Sage of the Southern Tier, they will eagerly sustain the Charleston nominee, though he should be HORATIO SEYMOUR himself. When the Softs were angry they built a platform at Buffalo, and killed CASS. Their wrath amounted to something. It produced results. On the other hand the Hards have been in a state of chronic ill temper for ten years. When they could have done mischief, they lacked courage; and now they lack strength. It is time they ceased talking.

WHERE ARE THE FOUNTAINS?—There seems to be a vague general impression abroad, that somewhere in the highways, by-ways, places, promenades, or alleys of New-York, public fountains of great beauty and freshness may be found. We should be glad to be informed precisely where these "diamonds of the desert" are to be looked for. Their sparkle has not yet enchanted, nor their cooling murmur soothed us, in these first burning days of the summer. There are, we believe, "statutable" fountains and "theoretical" wells of cool water by the way-side, somewhere on the records of the City Government. But thirsty men are sad materialists; and a Barmecide draught of Croton will go but a little way towards appeasing the rabid temper of a New-York population in the dog-days. Have the City Fathers all been bitten by mad curs that they persevere in this practical hydrophobia?

Amusements.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The season at this house under Mr. STRAKOSCH'S management came to an end on Saturday, when there was a matinée. The two last performances were devoted to Mr. STRAKOSCH'S benefit, and as it always rains when a manager appeals to the public, the attendance was by no means remunerative. Those who braved the storm of Friday were handsomely rewarded for their hardy courage. A finer performance has seldom been heard in this country than that of "Norma" on the night in question. CORTESI as the Druidess was superb. The rôle is an important one, and embraces the whole gamut of female emotion from love to hatred. Every one knew that CORTESI would be great in it, but few anticipated the tumultuous success which attended the lady's performance, and which has only been equaled by her triumph in "Polluto." This new test of the lady's powers places her in the foremost rank of the great artists who have visited America. She is so good that no one thinks of making a comparison between her and any of her predecessors. It is a pity that we have had so little of her.

On Wednesday there will be a grand Patriotic performance in aid of the Italian Fund. All the great artists now in the country have volunteered for the occasion, and an attractive programme has been issued, which it is hoped will tempt the public to deposit its dollars. As a general thing, entertainments of this sort are failures. In the present case there is so much public sympathy with the object in view that it will, we trust, prove an exception to the rule. Mr. ULLMAN has volunteered the use of the house.

METROPOLITAN MUSIC SOCIETY.—This Association, of whose first concert at the Academy of Music we had occasion to speak in terms of merited praise, announces a series of open air concerts at Palace Garden, commencing on Friday next and continuing experimentally for six nights. The retreat are arranged on a scale of rare liberality; an orchestra of sixty and a full military band are engaged, and a number of the best soloists in the country will perform every night, amongst others the great pianist Mr. S. B. MILLS. There are three conductors, Mr. H. C. DEMOREST, Mr. CARL ANSCHUTZ, and Mr. G. F. BRISTOW.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—THE FLORENCES appear in two popular pieces to-night.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—A play called "Art and Artifice" is announced here.

LAURA KEENE'S THEATRE.—The Gougenheim sisters attract good audiences, and play in the burlesque "Cinderella" to-night.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—A new pictorial drama, founded on the present war in Europe, will be produced here to-night, with the assistance of the Keller troupe. It is called the "War in Italy," and introduces, of course, a magnificent series of grand Military Tableaux. Messrs. KELLER, EDDY, PEARSON and DAVIDGE sustain the principal masculine parts, and Mad. POMAI and Mrs. EDDY the female.

BOWERY THEATRE.—Another new drama by J. F. POOLE, Esq., called "The Oath of Vengeance," will be produced here to-night, followed by "Tom and Jerry in New-York."

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—A romantic drama called "Magic Well," will be produced here to-night. In the afternoon there is a variety of entertainments.

WOOD'S MINSTRELS.—A capital programme is provided for this evening's entertainments.

The Herald's Story of Postage Stamps Branded by the President—Mr. Buchanan on Bennett.

From the Constitution, June 18.

The recent dangerous and infamous rumors with respect to alleged counterfeit and re-used postage stamps have induced us to examine into the probabilities of such a false issue; and the result of our investigations has convinced us that these preposterous reports are worthy of no credence whatever. We were, from the first, strongly inclined to discredit such wholesale statements, as, independent of the mechanical and artistic difficulties to be overcome in counterfeiting the stamp, we felt assured that no fraud of any material magnitude could be perpetrated without the immediate knowledge of the Post-office Department, whose thorough system of accounts, checks, registering, &c., must quickly detect any error or spurious issue. The denial of these allegations proves our doubts to have been well founded.

But we purpose now to show, as briefly as possible, how utterly improbable are the late fabrications. In addition to the checks possessed by the Government, there are many other important and almost insuperable difficulties presented to the stamp counterfeiter, which nothing but a very handsome and safe profit could induce him to attempt to surmount; and he can never realize this profit, as it necessitates an improbable combination of unusually favorable circumstances. The stamp combines the most perfect protections known to modern art, and is subjected, during its manufacture, to many different processes which require the best artistic skill and mechanical ingenuity. The first artists in the country are employed to prepare the original dies; and there are several distinct branches of the engraving art exercised on every separate stamp. The paper whereon it is printed requires a nice adjustment of weight, density, sizing, calendering, and absorbing qualities, in order that the various operations which it undergoes may not work inharmoniously to the disadvantage of the stamp. The simple item of gum alone has caused much earnest inquiry and repeated experiments, that a suitable article might be procured; and the printing is done by men of tried experience in steel and copper-plate printing. The durable and again the fleeting natures of the inks have each a special object, while the perforation is not only a great convenience, but a most valuable additional protection. The machines used for this purpose are superior improvements over those owned by the British Government, and are so delicate in their adjustments, punches, &c., as to require continual supervision and outlay of money, while a special machinist superintends their operation and keeps them in repair. In short, all the obstacles to the successful counterfeit of a bank note are to be found in the stamp, and in connection with others of equal and novel importance.

It is falsely charged that photography has been profitably applied to the stamp counterfeit. The various colors are an insuperable objection to this process, for the negatives, whence the impressions are produced, print one tint only, which must be removed, and then every individual stamp repainted with the utmost nicety and artistic finish to produce anything like the original; while, finally, every stamp must be well gummed and perfectly perforated; and all this time, labor and skill must be given to produce less than three cents! Now the experience of banks does not justify them in apprehending danger to their tinted or protected notes from the photographic process; and certainly the inducements held out to the ingenious counterfeiter are incalculably greater where he can realize a profit of five, ten, fifty, and one hundred dollars on each impression, than where he can, at the best, obtain but three, five, ten, or twelve cents for his patience and workmanship. Moreover, the risk is much increased in counterfeiting a circulation known over the whole Union, and which commands the constant, jealous scrutiny of an Argus-eyed Government. The whole thing is ridiculously absurd. No rogue with an ounce of brains would incur so dangerous a risk for so problematical and insignificant a gain.

In continuation, we must candidly confess that we regard the alleged loss from re-used stamps as another humbug. Suppose the utterer of the old stamp could erase the office mark without affecting the stamp itself, (and we deny that this can be done to defy ordinary detection where the stamp has been properly cancelled,) where can he procure a large amount of effaced stamps? Can he beg, borrow, or steal them in quantities? And is the man capable of such a miserably mean action likely to have a large correspondence? Look at the difficulties he will encounter. He must carefully remove the cancelling mark without defacing the stamp; he must take off the stamp from the envelope without injuring it; he must laboriously re-gum and finally sell the isolated stamp at a large discount if he wish to compete with the Government. Are people in the habit of purchasing single stamps of unknown parties? And, moreover, any person known to sell single stamps under such circumstances is liable to suspicion. Human nature is prone to suspect evil; and there are too many spies abroad, too many meddlers with their neighbors' business, for any to hope to escape detection in a fraud necessarily so public. So much for this imaginary loss to the Government. We would remark, however, on leaving this subject, that we believe many sub-officers and clerks are entirely too careless in cancelling the stamps; and a little more attention to this matter, would effectually dispose of any possible reissue of the obliterated stamp. In conclusion, suppose the counterfeiter be a steel engraver, photographer, printer, gummer, paper manufacturer, and a first-class machinist, or all these combined—a marvelous man truly!—how could he, without great risk, circulate spurious stamps through the country, unless he have many accomplices, and be aided by remarkably credulous, ignorant, or dishonest postmasters? Finally, we have yet to see or know of a single counterfeit in circulation; and the common sense, practical reason is that it would not pay.

Let us, therefore, hear no more of these absurd and infamous reports. They outrage good sense and decency, and are a libel alike on the Government and the public at large. The injury to the postal service is very material, as doubt is excited where no just cause for such doubt exists; and false odium is, moreover, cast on a system which has been steadily and justly growing in popular favor. The experience we have on this subject is powerfully sustained and corroborated by that of foreign governments, who find no other plan to work as simply, conveniently, and economically as that now almost universally adopted. The more we think of this matter, the more firmly are we assured in our mind that these shameless fabrications come from interested parties; and we insist upon genuine, undoubted facts and proofs before we can be induced hereafter to attach the slightest faith to them. If, as we strongly suspect, these contemptible and criminal rumors have been palmed on the community to subserve private aims and interests, we congratulate the public that the only object gained has been to create an inquiry which results in the most complete denial and refutation of the whole base and malicious calumny.

THE BOSTON MUSEUM OF COMPARATIVE ZOOLOGY—CUTTING THE FIRST SOD.—The ceremony of cutting the first sod for the new Museum of Comparative Zoology, to be erected upon the open area west of Divinity Hall, Cambridge, took place, June 14, in the presence of about two hundred persons, including College Professors and a few friends who had been notified of the event to take place. Gov. BANKS made a few remarks, then took a spade and planted it firmly in the ground, (saying, pleasantly, "We begin with the North," in a voice audible to the nearest bystanders, and by them cordially applauded,) cutting out with separate thrusts, four sides of an even square piece of turf, and thoroughly loosening it; he then led forward Mrs. AGASSIZ (amid the plaudits of the assembly) from the place where she was standing in the circle of observers; she took the spade, turned the first sod and threw it into the wheelbarrow. The Governor threw the next; the Reverend President of the University (Dr. WALKER) the next; Professor AGASSIZ the next; Mr. WILLIAM GRAY the next; the Hon. CHARLES A. PHELPS, President of the Senate, the next; CHARLES HALE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, the next; Dr. JACOB BIGELOW the next; Mr. GEORGE TICKNOR the next, and Mr. JAMES LAWRENCE the next.

The first quarter century celebration of the establishment of Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Indiana, will be held on the 12th and 13th of July. The Alumni and others who have been students at the ENTICING SEAMEN TO DESERT.—The Commandant of the receiving-ship North Carolina, stationed at the Navy yard in Brooklyn, has long been annoyed by the number of small boats prowling about the ship, and from the attempts at desertion on the part of some of the seamen, aided by the men in the small boats. This has grown into a troublesome practice. One of the parties implicated in the enticement of two seamen to desert has been arrested, and examined before Commissioner STILWELL. It appears from the testimony, elicited on the examination by LEOPOLD C. NEWMANN, Esq., who appeared for the Government, that on the 19th of April last, a small boat containing two men, one of whom was the prisoner, was seen passing backwards and forwards for upwards of two hours, apparently waiting for something. Suddenly the guard observed two seamen let themselves down into the water, from the port windows of the ship, and strike out for some booms, or heavy logs, which surrounded the vessel at some thirty feet distant, upon arriving on which the boat backed up to them, and getting in, they were rowed away hastily. That evening the seamen were rearrested, but the men who aided them kept out of the way. A warrant was issued for the apprehension of CONNALANG, one of the offenders, who is well known, and he was arrested by officer WM. H. DECKER, of the Harbor Police. After a thorough examination on Saturday, the prisoner was committed to await the action of the Grand Jury.

COMMENCEMENT WEEK AT THE NEW-YORK UNIVERSITY.—The exercises of Commencement Week at the New-York University will commence on Sunday evening, June 26, when the Rev. Dr. CLARKE will preach the annual sermon before the Young Men's Christian Association of the University, in the Rev. Dr. HUTTON'S Church on Washington-square. On the evening of the 27th inst., the Anniversary of the Euclean Society will be celebrated in the large chapel of the University. The Rev. JOSEPH P. THOMPSON, D. D., Pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, is to be the orator, and Prof. H. M. PIERCE, of Rutgers Female Institute will read the poem of the occasion. On the 28th inst. the examinations for admission will commence at 9½ A. M., in the Chancellor's room, and in the evening the annual meeting of the Phi Beta Kappa Society will be held in the Chancellor's room at 7 o'clock. At 8 P. M. the same day the Anniversary of the New-York Beta of the Phi Beta Kappa will be celebrated in the University Chapel, and the Rev. Dr. HICKOK, V. P., of Union College, will deliver an oration. The Commencement exercises will take place at Niblo's, at 10½ A. M., on Wednesday, the 29th inst., and at 4 P. M. the same day the annual meeting of the Alumni will take place in the Chapel of the University.

LAYING A CORNER-STONE.—On Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, the interesting ceremonies connected with the laying of a corner stone, took place in Fifty-ninth-street, near the Ninth avenue. The church is to be under the care of the Missionary Fathers of St. Paul, who also intend to build a monastery on the same ground. All the railroad cars running in this direction, were crowded to excess, so that many wishing to be present at the ceremonies, were obliged, for want of a conveyance, to go home without having their wish satisfied. There were at least fifteen thousand persons on the ground, which was appropriately fitted up for the occasion. Among those present were the Most Reverend Archbishop HUGHES, Bishop BAYLEY, the Very Reverend Mr. STARRS, the Rev. Father BAKER, DESHON, HEWIT, PRESTON, MCMAHENEY, SLEVIN, and many others of the Catholic clergy. The Sermon on the occasion was delivered by the Archbishop, who took for his text those words of the Prophet, "Unless the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it." In concluding, he said, the people should aid, by every means in their power, those holy priests who have diverted their lives to the arduous duty of giving missions to the Catholic people throughout the United States.

PSI UPSILON FRATERNITY.—The twenty-sixth annual Convention of the Psi Upsilon Fraternity will be held in this City on Wednesday and Thursday, the 22d and 23d inst. The business meetings of the Convention will be held in the hall of the Historical Society, corner of Second-avenue and Eleventh street. The public exercises will take place at the Rev. Dr. SMITH'S church, corner of Second-avenue and Fourteenth-street, on the evening of the 23d inst. WM. H. DRAPER, M. D., of the Lambda Chapter of New-York, will deliver the annual oration, and SAMUEL J. PIKE, of the Kappa Chapter, Maine, will be the Poet of the occasion. The Fraternity meets in Convention each year successively at the seat of every Chapter. This year the Lambda Chapter, of Columbia College, gives the Convention. The Fraternity, during the past year, has prospered, and a great many new members have been added to its rolls.

CITY MORTALITY.—The City Inspector reports that there were 398 deaths in the City during the past week, an increase of 48 as compared with the mortality of the week previous. Of the whole number 89 were men, 61 women, 138 boys, and 110 girls. There were 87 deaths of diseases of the brain and nerve, 115 of the lungs and throat, 4 of old age, 27 of eruptive fevers and skin diseases, 57 stillborn and premature births, 62 of diseases of the stomach and other digestive organs, 24 of uncertain complaints, 6 of the urinary organs, and 18 from violent causes. The nativity table shows that 284 of the deceased were natives of the United States, 67 of Ireland, 26 of Germany, and the balance of various foreign countries.

FOR EUROPE.—The Vanderbilt steamship Ariel Capt. WILSON, left on Saturday afternoon for Southampton and Havre, with 163 passengers, and $950,-985 19 in specie. Among her passengers were Mesdames LABORDE and POINSOT. The City of Washington, which also left on Saturday for Liverpool, carried 100 cabin and 150 steerage passengers, and $500,-000 in specie. Among her passengers were the Rev. Dr. GILLETTE and Mr. W. E. ROBINSON and lady of this City. The City of Washington will stop at St. Johns, to receive the wrecked passengers of the Edinburgh.

ACCIDENTALLY DROWNED.—Three young men, VALENTINE SMEDLEY, JOHN MERRIAM and CHARLES J. BUCKOFF went out on the North River in a sail boat, yesterday afternoon. About 2½ o'clock P. M., when they were near Weehawken, BUCKOFF proposed to go in bathing, and accordingly stripped and dove into the river, and in a few moments reappeared upon the surface, made a few faint efforts to swim, and sank. His body has not yet been recovered. BUCKOFF was 19 years of age, and resided at No. 116 Thompson-street.

MR. DELAVAN'S SUCCESSOR AS COLLECTOR OF ASSESSMENTS.—We learn that Mr. JONATHAN TROTTER, for some years past the Chief Clerk of the Street Inspector's Department, has been appointed Collector of Assessments, as the successor of Mr. DELAVAN, who has been "translated" to the City Inspectorship. The appointment is a very good one. Mr. TROTTER is one of our most respectable citizens; he was twice elected Mayor of Brooklyn, and was once President of our Board of Aldermen.

OBSERVING THE SUNDAY LAWS.—The recent decisions against the liquor sellers had the effect yesterday of inducing a portion of the liquor dealers to close their stores. The large German lager-bier saloons kept open doors, but decanters, jugs, etc., were kept out of sight. The corner groceries, and the smaller class of liquor shops were almost universally closed. The beneficial effects of the closing of the stores will be observed by a glance at the sparseness of our police reports.

A BOY DROWNED.—WM. J. SINCLAIR, a boy ten years old, while playing, yesterday afternoon, on board a canal boat, at the foot of Roosevelt-street, fell overboard and was drowned. His body was recovered and taken to the residence of his parents, in Cherry-street.

FOUND DROWNED.—The body of an unknown young man was found yesterday in the East River, near the foot of Twenty-third-street. He was of medium height, had brown hair, sandy whiskers, and blue eyes. An inquest was held by the Coroner, and no marks of violence being visible, a verdict of "accidental drowning" was rendered.

SUDDEN DEATH.—NICHOLAS BALFORD, a German, died suddenly, yesterday, at his residence, No. 169 Third-street, as is supposed from disease of the heart. He was seated on a lounge, when his head fell back, and he died instantly.

DEATH TO DOGS.—During the past week the number of dogs sacrificed by the dog catchers was as follows: On the 16th instant, 471 dogs; 7th, 279; 8th, 203; 9th, 199; 10th, 143; 11th, 180;—total, 1,476. The cost of these captures was $738.

FIRE IN BROADWAY.—Between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire occurred in a small brick building in the rear of No. 573 Broadway. The building is occupied as a melting shop by EDWARD W. BURR, a jeweler. The fire was accidental, and was extinguished with trifling damage.

FIRE IN PEARL STREET.—A slight fire took place at 8¼ o'clock, A. M., yesterday, in the premises No. 548 Pearl street, occupied by JOSEPH GERBRICH, dealer in rags and paper.

Police Reports.

RIOT IN THE FOURTH WARD—A POLICEMAN STABBED.—Cherry-st., in the Fourth Ward, was the scene of a riot between 12 and 1 o'clock Sunday morning. Officer McCracken, who attempted to stop it, was compelled to call to his aid Officers, Welch and Pendleton, when peace was for a short time maintained. Soon afterwards, however, the difficulty was renewed, during which Officer McCracken was stabbed in the left side with a table fork, in the hands of John Sullivan whom, after a fierce struggle, he succeeded in taking to the Station-house. McCracken was otherwise bruised, and lost his shield. The disturbance finally so increased that a platoon of policemen were called out, and the crowd were at length driven away. The wound of Officer McCracken, one of the most efficient men in the Precinct, is not a serious one, though he will not be able to go on duty for some days. His assailant was locked up by Justice CORNELL.

FIGHT AMONG BOATMEN.—Several boatmen, belonging to a barge lying at the foot of Forty-seventh-street, North River, having been drinking freely on Saturday afternoon, in the evening got into a general fight. The bruised faces of the men, and the blood-bespattered deck, showed that the contest had been severe and exciting. John Collins, one of the number, was stabbed in seven places—four times in the head, twice in the left thigh, and once in the leg. His injuries are pronounced mortal. John Trainor, who is charged with the stabbing, was committed by Justice KELLY to await the result of the injuries inflicted.

DARING ROBBERY OF A SAFE.—A youth of respectable appearance, on Saturday afternoon, called at the store of James Scott, Jr., No. 42 Beaver-street, and asked to see Mr. Scott. As Mr. Scott was absent, he said he would wait till he returned, which was expected every minute. Availing himself of an opportunity, when he thought no one was looking at him, he thrust his hand into the safe, and extracted $75 in bills. He was arrested on the spot, taken before Justice CONNOLLY, and committed for trial. He gives his name as John McKay, age seventeen, and occupation "nothing at present."

AN UNTRUSTY MESSENGER.—Mr. Anson Merryman, of No. 1 Waverley-place, on Saturday employed Jacob Vankeren, a colored youth, to carry to Brooklyn some wearing apparel. Jacob took the garments to a pawn office, pocketed the amount loaned on them, and was not seen again till in the evening, when an officer found him at a negro dance-house, enjoying the merry dance with true Ethiopian relish. Justice BRENNAN locked him up.

FURIOUS DRIVING.—Morris Watson, a dirt cart driver, in his hurry to get home on Saturday evening, after the conclusion of his day's work, drove his horse at a reckless speed, and in doing so ran over William Matlock, of No. 13 Essex-street, knocking him senseless to the pavement. Mr. Matlock was conveyed to the City Hospital, and Watson committed to the Tombs. On being asked why he drove so fast, his only excuse was, that he was in a hurry to get home to his supper.

DOING A SMASHING BUSINESS.—George R. G. Nash, occupies apartments at No. 57 Morton-street. Being in arrears for rent, he gave, it is alleged, as security, a mortgage on his furniture. Having failed to cancel the mortgage, a levy was made upon the furniture on Saturday, whereupon Nash, it is said, fastened the door, and wilfully smashed the furniture. He was arrested and held to bail by Justice KELLY.

DESCENT ON A DANCE-HOUSE.—A posse of the Tenth Ward Police, headed by Captain Davis, on Saturday evening, made a descent upon the dance-house kept by Charles Ditmare, a German, at No. 1 Delancy street. Ditmare, three musicians, and fifteen men, women and boys were arrested and locked up in the Station-house for the night. Yesterday they were taken before Justice BRENNAN, and the most of them were committed as disorderlies.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY.—A smartly-dressed man, giving his name as Samuel Smith, on Saturday night passed several counterfeit $2 bills on the Bank of Middletown, Conn., at a number of stores in Eighth-avenue. He was arrested and taken before Justice QUACKENBUSH, when, after being fully identified by several upon whom he had passed the bills, he was committed for trial.

WILLIAM MULLIGAN ARRESTED AGAIN.—William Mulligan is again in difficulty. At the race course on Thursday last, some unpleasant words passed between him and the Messrs. Matthews. On Saturday evening they met again in Houston-street, when Mulligan, it is alleged, drew a revolver and threatened to shoot them. Mulligan appeared before Justice BRENNAN and gave $500 bail to answer.

BURGLARY.—John Berger, a German, was yesterday arrested on charge of having broken into No. 252 Sixth-st., during Saturday night, and stealing $50 worth of moulders' tools. The property was found in his possession. Justice BRENNAN committed him to answer a charge of burglary.

THE STOLEN PIN.—Mr. Dennis F. Sullivan, of No. 132 Water street, says the report that he was the person who made the complaint against Matilda Neimer for having stolen a diamond pin, is a mistake.

The New-York and Flushing Ferry.

STEAMBOATS VERSUS RAILROADS—SUNDAY EXCURSIONS TO FLUSHING.

The movement for creating a steam-ferry between Flushing, College Point and New-York, which has been slow for several weeks, on account of the backwardness of the citizens to subscribe the necessary amount of stock, is likely to be a success. A meeting of the leading citizens of Flushing was held on Saturday evening, JOHN H. BROWER presiding, at which the whole amount required was subscribed, and they then adjourned to Wednesday evening, to perfect the organization of the Company, and to take the proper steps to carry out their plans. The object is to provide themselves with such steamboat facilities as are enjoyed by the people of Harlem, by which they will be entirely relieved from their dependence upon the railroad, whose present management has become distasteful to them, on account, among other things, of an increase in the rate of commutation, while they (the commuters) are restricted to two trains—an early and late one. The choice of trains costs them $8 50 per month, which is, they say, a higher rate than is charged upon any railroad of similar length running out of the City. The subscription may be increased to sixty thousand dollars, if the Company so elect. This money is to be expended—first, in the deepening of the channel between College Point and Flushing Creek, the latter already having water sufficient for a light draft boat, except at very low tides. Secondly, in the construction of a first-class passenger steamboat, of very light draft, which will be capable of entering the creek at any stage of water. Thirdly—It is understood that the Company will purchase the Enoch Dean, and make such improvements in her as may be required to increase her speed, and adapt her to the carrying of most of the freight. The establishment of this new line will add considerably to the value of property, particularly along the water front, all of which is owned by ISAAC PECK & SON, and that at College Point by Mr. POPENHOUSEN, who is the head and principal proprietor of the Strattonport India Rubber Works. These gentlemen subscribed liberally to the undertaking. The Messrs. LAWRENCE also took a considerable share of the stock, but the active interest which Mr. BROWER manifested, when it was at a dead stand-still, confessedly saved the enterprise from present failure. It is understood that the Company will organize under a charter obtained from the Legislature at its last session, and as there will be nearly two hundred subscribers to the stock—each one being an active agent for the boats, a handsome business will, it is thought, be secured to the line. To obviate the difficulty from ice in Winter, it has been suggested that a track would be laid from Flushing to College Point,—about two miles, for conveying the passengers and freight when the boats are prevented from entering the creek.

Alderman CHARLOCK, who now owns the controlling interest in the Flushing Railroad, meantime, has not been idle. Since he took charge of the Road, important improvements have been made in the mode of transacting the business. The old and inconvenient stopping place at Hunter's Point, which was often obstructed by low water and ice, has been abandoned. A fine pier, some two hundred yards long, has been built out into the East River, and the track extends to the end of it, so that the cars run to within twenty feet of the boat. In the place of the old tumble-down shed which distigured the former landing, a handsome passenger-house has been erected. The Road is being put in thorough repair, and a shed one hundred feet long is being erected over the platform adjoining the Flushing depôt.

The new steamer Mattano, one of the swiftest and most commodious of her class, has been secured to make regular calls at Hunter's Point on her way from Astoria, to receive the Flushing passengers, and also to convey them from the City, and she is so punctual in her arrangements that it is very seldom even a moment's time is lost in making the connections. The time occupied from the City to Hunter's Point, or in the return, is generally twelve to fifteen minutes. Last Sunday excursion-trains were run throughout the day from Hunter's Point to Flushing, each way, making a trip every two hours between 8 o'clock A. M. and 6 o'clock P. M., and it has been given out that the arrangement would be continued for the season. The conductor says, considering it was the first day, and that there was no previous notice given, the amount of travel was good.

BROOKLYN INTELLIGENCE.

DROWNED WHILE ON AN EXCURSION.—About 9 o'clock last evening a man fell overboard from a sloop in the East River, just off Fulton Ferry, and was drowned before assistance could reach him. The ferry-boat Fulton was crossing the river at the time, when she was stopped by the pilot, and WM. SCOTT WORRELY, a deck hand, launched a yawl quickly and put off to render assistance, but unfortunately his good intentions were unavailing. He hailed the sloop, and ascertained that the christian name of the man drowned was GEORGE, from New-York, but the balance of the name was not known. The sloop had on board a party of men, women and children, who had been up the East River on a Sunday excursion. The man drowned accidentally fell overboard. A rope was immediately thrown to him, and he had hold of it once, but for some reason not known did not keep his hold. A small scow with one man in it was then sent to his assistance from the sloop, but after being shoved off it was found that there were no oars in it. The scow floated off towards the Hook, and the sloop when last seen was endeavoring to overtake it.

A SUCCESSFUL FAIR.—The First Mission Sunday-school, of the Strong-place Baptist Church, have held a three-days' fair, during the last week, at No. 155 Atlantic-street, which proved to be quite a successful undertaking. During the three days, 1,200 persons visited the rooms, which were handsomely decorated for the occasion. The net receipts amounted to $700.

ALLEGED INFANTICIDE.—A servant girl named MARY ROGERS, residing at No. 219 Degraw-street, was arrested yesterday, by Officer TUOMY, of the Third Precinct Police, on a charge of throwing her newborn babe into a vault, at the above house. She was committed for examination.

ACCIDENT.—A laborer named JOHN RYAN was badly crushed between two hogsheads of molasses, at the Atlantic Docks, Saturday. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital, by the Third Precinct Police.

MILITARY.—Mr. E. B. PIKE has recently been elected captain of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment, N. Y. S. M., vice OLIVER B. COTTEN.

ROBBERIES.—House No. 391 Myrtle-avenue, was, on Saturday night, robbed of property value at $152. A servant girl left the house of W. W. RUSSELL, on Gates-avenue, suddenly on Saturday last, taking with her property not her own, valued at $100.

MORTALITY.—There were only 77 deaths in this city last week. Population, 250,000.

THE COURTS.—Circuit Court Calendar for this day—Nos. 92, John F. Griffin and others vs. George M. Chapman; 102, James A. Renaud vs. Charles Truesdell. To be tried by the Court without a jury. Jury causes will be taken up to-morrow.

City Court Calendar for this day—No. 15, Bickford and wife vs. Dougherty—the last case on the calendar.

LARGE DAMAGES FOR THE ARREST OF A BOSTON MERCHANT.—SUPREME COURT, KINGS COUNTY.—Charles S. Brown vs. Euclid Chadsey.—This action was tried before Judge LOTT and a Jury, on the 17th June, and verdict was rendered for $2,000 damages for plaintiff, which carries the costs. The action is brought for a false and malicious arrest. The facts as they appeared on the trial were, that the plaintiff, who is a respectable Boston merchant, was arrested in New-York at the instigation of the defendant, in the Spring of 1857, on the charge of robbing a Bank of which the defendant was President. It appeared in proof that the Bank never had been robbed, and that there was no possible ground for the arrest, and the charge was dismissed. BRISON & JENKS, Attornies, for plaintiff; S. CHAUNCEY, Attorney, for defendant.

Confession of a Wife-Murderer.

The telegraph has announced the execution, on Friday last, at St. Louis, of GEORGE H. LAMB, for the murder of his wife. Previous to his execution he made the following confession:

"I was married to SARAH S. STAFFORD at the Court House in Quincy, Illinois, by a Justice of the Peace, on the 24th of November, 1856; was then a resident of Menoota, Illinois; returned there, leaving my wife with her father in Hamilton, Hancock County, Illinois; on or about the 25th November, 1857, I went back from Mendota to Hamilton, and told my wife I wished to take her South to spend the Winter: she consented, and we left for the South, and we arrived in St. Louis on the 27th, 28th or 29th of November last; we got here before daylight, took breakfast at King's Hotel, and then went to the Astor House, kept by HERMAN NORP, on Franklin-avenue: while there my wife was unwell, and Doctors CHRISTOPHER and WASHINGTON attending her; her sickness was caused by giving her poison: the poison was strychnine; I got it at a drug-store on Broadway; bought the strychnine for the purpose of giving it to my wife; I gave it to her at least twice, and may have given it to her thrice, but cannot say positively.

I gave it to her for the purpose of killing her. She made so much noise in the spasms, that it alarmed Mrs. NORP and wife, who came to our room and insisted that I should send for a physician. That was the cause of my sending at different times for the doctors; wished to allay any suspicions of NORP and wife as to what I had done. Each of the physicians prescribed for her at different times and I gave her the medicine; she vomited after taking the poison; think before taking any medicine; first gave her poison the second day we were there, at about 10 o'clock at night; she was confined to her bed for about two weeks, from the effects of poison; on the 16th of December I told JOSEPH MOYER of what I had done and meant to do, and he agreed to help me; he took my baggage and that of my wife from the Astor House to his lodgings on Broadway; on the afternoon of the same day I told my wife I was going to Carondelet, and she agreed to go.

We left the Astor House in a baggage-wagon. I think the driver was a negro; don't remember the number of the wagon. My wife had a bandbox; we went to the lower ferry; she sat in a room on the wharf-boat while I went to look for a skiff which I had before purchased. I had engaged two boys, whose names I do not know, to bring the skiff to me from the dry docks. I bought it for seven dollars. We remained about an hour at the landing. The boys then came up with the skiff. JOSEPH MOYER was at the landing to see us start, and was to have gone with us, but he and I thought it would not be necessary. My wife and I got into the skiff. I rowed down the river and stopped below the steamboats about fifty rods, at the foot of a street built out into the river, and there landed. She asked me the reason; I to'd her it was to get a rock to ballast the boat. I did not tell her my real object, which was to get a rock to sink her body in the river. I called two boys, who brought to me two rocks weighing from ten to twelve pounds each.

We then again started; we went on by an island without trees, on the Missouri side; did not see Carondelet; did not notice more than one island of the kind spoken of; we went down till we were about half way past the island, on the east side, about forty-five yards from the shore; the steamboat channel is between the Illinois shore and where we were; I then laid my oars in the boat, seized hold of my wife by the back of the neck with my right hand, and pushed her head down under the water; held it there about a minute or longer; then I lifted her partly out of the water, and found she was dead; took off her two shawls and bonnet, and tied some twine two or three times around a stone, and attached the other end to her neck; then lifted the rock over the skiff and let it down into the water, slipping the cord through my hands till it was all out; I then threw the body into the river, and the weight of the rock carried it down instantly; the rock was a little larger than this book, [Revised Statutes;] it would weigh ten or twelve pounds; I had got the twine for the purpose of using it thus; I then rowed to the island, thinking it was the Missouri shore, landed, and shoved the skiff off out into the stream; the skiff was of medium size, twelve or fifteen feet long; I do not remember whether it was painted or not; I left the oars in the boat; think there were three or four of them; but did not leave any stones there; I then hallooed for some one to come and take me off the sand-bar; I hallooed for about an hour, when a German and another person came and took me off; it was getting dark when I threw my wife overboard; I designed to drown her, and left the Astor House with that design; the reason was that I was sure I could not live happily with her; she had never said or done anything to cause me to feel so; I had no ill-feelings towards her or towards any of her relatives; I felt as though I could not go back among my friends and acquaintances with her, because I was afraid they would think I had married one below me; after getting ashore from the island, I came back to the City, arriving at about nine o'clock; I met MOYER; he asked me how I had succeeded; I told him, "All has gone under," and supposed he understood me; I went to his boarding-house, on Broadway, half way between Cherry and Wash streets, on the same side as the hat-store which had taken fire some days before; do not know the name of the house, nor of the man who kept it; on the next day I left St. Louis, and returned to Mr. STAFFORD'S, at Hamilton, taking with me all her things, except what she had on; told her parents I had buried her at Memphis, and gave them the names of the doctors who attended her. I did this to cover up the facts. On the 30th of November I was married again to LOUISA SHARTLIFF; she did not then know that I had been married to SARAH STAFFORD; married so soon because she said she would not wait for me any longer; kept company with her the Fall before marrying my other wife; can offer no excuse for the murder of my wife, except that it was for the purpose of marrying this one; my present wife was not encinte before my marriage; if there is a virtuous woman, she is one; had held no criminal intercourse with her; have said to Mr. STAFFORD that two men were in the skiff with me when I drowned my wife: am sorry for the statement; it was false; do not know why I made it; suppose the evil spirit was in me. Two men did know my design a short time before it was executed; told them and asked one of them to assist me; he consented out of friendship; he came along to the river and not in the wagon; his name is JOSEPH MOYER, and he boarded where I lodged the night I came back; paid him $5, I think; he knew my intention and went because I wished him to go; the name of the other is JOSEPH SAWYER; cannot say where he is now; he was in Menoota the day I left there; MOYER is a small-sized man, would weigh some 130 pounds, spare-faced, dark complexion, with black hair, and is a painter; do not think he resides here; he may be aged twenty-five years or more, not over five feet; those were the only persons whom I told of my design; to one THOS. L. BEALS, I said something about it, but he he left the city before it was accomplished; do not know whether he knows the result; NORP'S family at the Astor House knew nothing of it; my present aim is to tell all the truth, and if there is anything in what I have here said which contradicts previous statements of mine, it is not from a desire to tell aught but the truth. I once belonged to the Church." [To this point the manner of the prisoner was calm, but with the last sentence above he dropped his head upon his hands and burst into tears. He remained thus for one minutes. At length he said:] "It is the transgressions of my duties towards my God which has brought me here, and has brought this on me."

THE FRONTIER TROUBLES IN TEXAS.—The Dallas Herald, censuring the acts of the parties who have committed outrages on the Indian Reservation, says there is some excitement at Belton in regard to the frontier difficulties, and after a series of inflammatory war speeches, only twenty-seven men were mustered into service who were willing to come in conflict with the United States troops on the Reservation; and they declined going unless the number or fifty men was raised. We have it from undoubted authority that the citizens of Waco are denouncing the attack on the Reserve by BAYLOR'S band of insurgents, and are indignant at the high-handed measures resorted to by them. We are receiving assurances on all sides that their conduct is seriously condemned by the moderate and law-abiding men of every county surrounding us.

We saw a gentleman from Tarrant County, a few days since, who reported that the citizens who had assembled on the frontier were fast leaving their camps,—indeed were going off in larger numbers than recruits were coming in. This is an evidence that the people of the frontier, who are honest and industrious citizens, cannot be long duped by the false alarms and documents sent out through the country.

The Receivers of the Bay State Mills have rendered their final account to the Massachusetts Supreme Court, and state that the whole sum received is $2 035 462 72, and the amount of allowance prayed for is $238,556; leaving in the hands of Receivers $1,796,805.

The Knight's Soliloquy.
Translated from the Spanish of Pedro de Castroy Anaya.
"I would not change my faith in them
For all the world beside,"—
'Twas thus, with an enthusiast's voice,
The young Orlando cried.
You think he spoke of ladies fair,
Whom he'd been toying with—
But he spoke, sir, of those tailors rare,
That matchless BROTHERS SMITH!
For cheapness, durability,
For texture, taste, and style,
Compare their goods with other goods
And at the difference smile!

SUMMER RESORTS.

NAHANT HOTEL.
SEASON OF 1859.

This famous Summer Hotel will be opened to the public on WEDNESDAY, June 15, under the management of Messrs. THOMAS RAND & SONS, of the Sagamore House.
The establishment is elaborately furnished, and will be conducted as heretofore, upon a liberal scale in all respects. Nahant is conceded to be the most healthy point in the vicinity of Boston, and possesses all desirable requisites for a desirable Summer retreat.
Season Boarders will be received upon favorable terms, and parties intending to pass a few weeks out of town, can be liberally accommodated during the early season, at very moderate rates.
GILMORE'S BAND have been engaged to furnish music the coming season, and no effort will be spared to offer visitors every facility for rational amusement and recreation, with all the comforts of a quiet home.
Excellent facilities for surf bathing; a first-class livery stable, billiard tables, bowling alleys, a shooting gallery, &c., are attached to the Hotel for the use of guests.
The steamer Nelly Baker will make four trips daily on and after the 15th, from Boston, and a line of coaches will connect at Lynn with cars on the Eastern Railroad, combining with telegraph facilities, superior advantages for communication with the City.
N.B.—Rooms may be secured for any portion of the season, on the premises, or from plans at the Sagamore House, Lynn. THOMAS RAND & SON.

HOW NEW-YORKERS LIVE.

Visits to the Homes of the Poor in the First and Fourth Wards.

High Rents in Lowly Quarters—The In-door Ornaments of Hovels—Chinese Boarding-houses, &c.

A correspondent quarrels with us for writing as if "New-Yorkers" live in cellars. They are not New-Yorkers, he avers, but low Irish, and dirty Dutch, washed up to the edge of our City, and there left. One might just as properly, in writing up the natural history of Manhattan Island, describe the swollen carcases of dead cats with which the restless sea at all times of tide fringes the Battery-front.

But they are New-Yorkers, whatever wind or freshet drove them over—some of them lately arrived, but others were here when our correspondent was passing rich with a single shilling in his pocket to "keep town-meeting" with, in the rural retreat that was his birth-place. That grizzly-bearded old man, his home in Washington-street, above Rector, who is taking his noon-day nap under the bank of the Battery Enlargement, his head pillowed and half buried in the straw emptied from an emigrant's bed, and his feet only an inch or two above the rising water-line, took a hand in the bread riots, and has figured (without a name, of course) in our history. The old woman we just visited has sold the withered vegetables that poison poor people, for ten years, out of the same damp cellar. There are a great many "oldest inhabitants" who call these dismal black-holes home. Their children are the ones that hold out dingy paws for pennies at the crossings, beg "something to buy bread for their sick mother," and not a few of them sit on the benches of the public schools, and hear the visitors expatiate on the wonderful privileges that children enjoy now-a-days. That group of unwashed boys on the Battery, digging with a piece of broken saucer for earth-worms as bait for eels, and who now scamper off dismayed because a span-worm lets himself down from the elm tree into their presence,—"if that kind gets into your ears," they say, "he sucks out your blood,"—they live in Washington-street, and many of them in cellars. Most of the noisy company of naked boys swimming in the lee of the eastern side of the Castle Garden wall, or shivering as they hold fast by the projecting rocks of the wall, and cheer the excursion boats, with very loud dancers on board, passing within a stone's throw of them, or devising ways and means to pay off their sisters if they keep the promise they yelled to them from the bank, that they'll "tell dad, and won't he lick 'em!" and who stop to wind bandages around their sores before proceeding to hang upon their limbs the little heaps of rags that we at first mistook for bleached seaweed, but which veritably assume the shape of trousers-tattered jackets and rimless hats, as they are disposed into position—these boys were most of them born New-Yorkers; they live in the Washington-street cellars and rear apartments, and bid fair to grow up no worse Aldermen and grog-sellers and drinkers than the majority.

We visited a great many more cellars on that hot day, but those we have described represent all the rest. In one of them, the "man of the house," raising himself from his bed on our entering, showed a head heavy with a shock of snowy hair, that would have been venerable in another place. He was cramped with rheumatism and full of ugly pains. He was a waiter in the old country, but too old for that now. He helped the old woman to wash, but it was hard work to pay the $7 rent per month, and get bread for the three children. "When there was a heavy rain did the water come in," we asked? "Oh! bless you, yes;" and pointing to a stain of mould along the wall about eighteen inches high, "it was up to there one day last week, and a great job it was to bail it out." In another, consisting of a single room, we found an old woman, bent almost to a right angle, sitting on a bundle and munching a crust. Her short black pipe lay in her lap, and she looked up pleased to see the policeman whom she knew, though he carried no tokens of his authority. "Granny" was 77 years old, and had lived in a cellar ever since she came over from the Old Country. She had been a strong woman once, but had munched pretty nearly her last crust. There were four other women present, two washing, one ironing, and one visiting; and in the dingy back ground were two men, one stretched at length on a chest, the other sitting on a bed, smoking. On the wall, just by the door, was pasted up, as if for ornament, one of the Mayor's notices, forbidding ashes and garbage to be thrown in the street—just as if there were any other place to throw them.

But filthy, damp and dismal as the cellars are, it is curious that they rent better than the upper rooms of the same buildings, always excepting those which can be used for groceries. Where the cellar brought $7 a month, the second-story rooms would fetch $5, and the third $4 or $3 50. In these old houses, which, thirty years ago, were the residences of families in good circumstances, it was sometimes possible to get a whiff of fresh air. Light, frequently, was not wanting, except in the bedrooms, and however miserably poor the wretched inmates were, there was seldom an entire absence of ornaments on the walls. In one place—they paid for two rooms $5 a month—two large picture-frames, veneered with mahogany, inclosed cards showing, in gilt and bronze inks, where Brown stout and London porter were to be had. They were promoted to their place of honor, not because the men had a care to keep it before their little ones where they were to get those bitter draughts, but because the colors were pretty. The mantelpiece was crowded with plaster images, once brilliant in yellows, reds, and greens, now richest in the color of the streets—images of Cupids with broken wings, dogs lacking a leg, little Samuels, and, towering over all and still fresh, a "Florence." In another room, on the third story, where three children, naked to their last garment, yet revealing not so much their nakedness as their dirt, rolled on the floor, a sore-eyed kitten sharing their frolics, the walls were covered with frames of pictures—wood-cuts from the Police Gazette, lithographs, in high colors, of the crucifixion, Christ in the manger, Mary at the Annunciation, the Parting Lovers, and JAMES BUCHANAN. Indeed, our bachelor President's face everywhere stood high among the religious subjects, and there were generally other indications of the political leaning of the residents, in broad posters, bearing DANIEL E. SICKLES' name and that of the last successful Aldermanic candidate, with occasionally a "True Democrats meet here;" or, "Friends of good oysters call in," pasted over the bed. In the bedroom of one of these apartments, immediately under the roof, lay a boy, sweating and groaning through the first stages of small-pox; till was hot as an oven, but dark and exceedingly close. Occasionally, in houses containing some ten or twelve families each, we stumbled upon some tidy body, with a fresher look, a Yankee clock ticking on the mantel, a straw carpet on the floor, the walls whitewashed within a moderate reach of memory, curtains at the windows, and a general look of decency. But they were scarce, and everywhere books were few. Entering a bedroom more pretentious than the rest, we found a brief little man, who confessed himself the lessee of the three-story house he occupied in part, and the rear house of the same size. He was anxious to show it all. The accommodations were for twelve families in each, but not more than half of the apartments were taken. The ground floor rooms let for $6 a month. He said he always required references, and if a family quarreled he turned it out. There was no cellar except to the rear house, and that was divided into wood and coal bins. He cleared them out every Saturday and wondered how decent people could live in such places as we had visited. The rooms had all been whitewashed in the Spring. The women were hard at work and of a respectable appearance. Between the front and rear buildings, so that the parlors of the latter looked out on them, were the water-closets, one for each floor and there is a key for each family. This is the universal arrangement, but when no such model landlord was about, the slatterns threw their slops at their out-house doors and trusted Providence for the rest. But this was a model concern—nothing less decent ought ever to be permitted by the City Inspector to stand, for this was wretched enough, and yet the reader must have noticed that the rent was less than of some of the most abominably filthy of the cellars. The roofs of these houses were generally strung with clothes-lines, and beside the rags of the occupants newly washed, hung and fluttered as the wind rose, the fine linen and snowy cotton goods of men who walk Broadway,—showing that in the wash-tub, the inmates find most of their bread and beef-bones. The Police know all the alleys and entry-ways well, for drunken brawls and bloody rows are of nightly occurrence. The quarrels between families which, where only two or three are sheltered under one roof, engender only curled lips and tart words on the part of the women, and law-suits between the men, in these Irish quarters, result in high-keyed Billingsgate, broken heads and a riot.

Greenwich-street presents a very different aspect, for it is mostly a German degradation that there presents itself. The cellars generally bear signs over their entrance, indicating that King Gambrinus' beverage abounds,—signs that out of vermilion American eagles and sky-blue American flags, announce curtly, "Lager Bier." With very few exceptions these beer cellars are brothels, the keeper often having his wife and sometimes his children on the premises. One, two or three Irish girls, with yellow hair, flauntingly dressed, and shoulders exposed, are the attraction that draw German sailors to these haunts. The walls are generally papered, the furniture, though faded and dingy, is gay. For a single room and a dark cellar in the rear, they pay enormous rents—$25, $30, and in one case $47 a month. On the corner of Liberty-street, no less than twenty of these dens that breathe of hell were visible at once. They are the rallying places of thieves and robbers. That one of them is permitted to flaunt its sign under the very shadow of Trinity, and in the eyes of all passers, is a disgrace to our municipal government. But if they should undertake to rid the vicinity of these establishments openly devoted to lewdness, whole houses in this street, from attic to cellar, would have to be emptied.

But the Fourth Ward is still more densely packed with the houses of the wretchedly poor than the First. Our first sally into it was upon the Chinese boarding-houses. The largest of these is located at No. 76 James-street. The first room on the second floor was the dining-room, dormitory and lounging-place of the Celestials. Along the sides of the room were fixed berths three deep, as in a state room; two "Chin-Chins" were sleeping heavily in two of them. A table in the centre was covered with straw matting. The stout landlord sat like a Turk on it, while around in chairs was a group busy at their game of cards. Their stake, the brass China coins with the square perforation in the centre, were scattered over the table. PASCHING looked up as we entered, and, in broken English, politely answered our questions, but kept on with the game. A five-year old boy, the son of PASCHING and his Irish lady, stood by, looking, in the face, like the pictures of the sun on old grave stones, with straight black hair, mere slits beside the nose for his black eyes to peep through, stolid, sleepy and fat. Chinese pictures, elaborately stiff, looking like the broad side of a tea-box, adorned the walls. A lamp burned on a side table, beside which lay the opium pipe. One offered to smoke to show us how it was done, but pointed to the sleepers to show how it affected them. The men were sailors, some of them dandies ashore, one of them spoke English intelligibly, full half puffing at their cigars. The cooking was done in an adjoining room, out of which there issued an odor of soup, whether of rats or shin-bones we could not distinguish. The boarders were first class, and the accommodations satisfactory no doubt. It was at this house that QUIMBO APPO lived. He was counsel for his countrymen, and now lies in a Tombs' cell awaiting his execution for murder.

At No. 61 Cherry-street is another Chinese boarding-house of some pretensions. In the little bedroom off the hall of the second story was the landlord's wife, a German girl, with protruding teeth, not pleasant to regard, and a whimpering face. She seemed rather proud of her position, but deferred to her companion, the Irish widow of a departed Chinaman, in the matter of permitting a visitor in the house. As they could not come to a conclusion, we decided for ourselves and walked in. A narrow-faced fellow, the landlord, scowled at us from the end of his table,—mat-covered and surrounded with companions, all intent upon the game. Each held his score or two of cards in his hand,—narrow slips of pasteboard covered with hieroglyphics, and to all our queries there came in answer only a growl and evidently an injunction to the rest to mind their game. There was the same arrangement of shelves along the sides for sleeping, the lamp burning on the table, the opium-pipe, and one man "gone in" under its influence dead drunk in his berth. Retreating from this inhospitable quarter, the women seemed to congratulate us. They knew little of the language of their spouses, it was very hard to learn. We inquired how the courting was done. "Oh, he say, 'Chinaman marry you?' Me say, 'Well'". We asked if they smoked much opium? They themselves never tried it, but some of the men were asleep all the time from its use. The boarders were all sailors,—they wouldn't take cigar-men who stayed in another place.

But the sun was getting low by this time, and further rambles must be postponed to another day.

MONDAY, June 20—A. M.

The sum total of the bids for the $5,000,000 Treasury Bills to be awarded at Washington, today, on which the preliminary deposit was made at the Sub-Treasury in this City, is thirteen millions dollars. Other New-York bids may appear at the Department this forenoon directly or through or in connexion with the Washington banking houses, as the latest hour for filing bids is 12 o'clock. The impression obtains that a considerable portion of the bids will be found above 5½ ℔ cent.; some of the parties applying on speculation merely for larger sums at 6 ℔ cent. than they care to take below this rate. The investment bids, from this and other cities, at or below 5½ ℔ cent., however, may absorb the sum advertised for. Some of our leading banking establishments profess that they would rather hold the old 5 ℔ cents past due, subject to immediate call on the Department, at any time, than to commit themselves to a new engagement at the same or a somewhat higher rate for 12 months. But all the Bills, due or to become due, it will be borne in mind, are alike subject to redemption through payment into the Custom House for duties.

The Foreign Trade at the Port of New-York the past week was active in the Import entries The total, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, is $5,063,701, against $2,454,238. The Export of Specie is, by comparison with the previous three or four weeks' movement, moderate, (chiefly by the two steamers which sailed on Saturday,) and the total, $1,669,268, is short of the receipts of the week from California, New-Orleans and the interior, which together may be reckoned at $2,334,595, viz.:

From California	$1,529,595
New-Orleans, (silver,)	205,000
By express, &c., $100,000 a day	600,000
Total	$2,334,595

This would leave the Bank Statement the gainer by about $700,000; but as the averages have run well through the week, on account of the early income from California, we have reason to believe the official result this afternoon will show the gain to be from $1,500,000 to $1,800,000; raising the total to nearly twenty-four millions again, as against $23,133,275 last Monday. We judge by the circumstances that the large Banks in and around Wall-street run about a million and a quarter better. The difference in the Sub-Treasury is but trifling. The balance now stands $3,604,765, against $3,684,754 at the close of the previous week. The disbursements were quite free, but the Customs came in liberally through most of the week. The Export of Specie the corresponding week last year was only $68,318. The shipment now embraces $100,000 in Mexican Silver by the Hamburg steamer on Wednesday, and $210,000 in Mexican Silver and English Sovereigns by the Ariel and City of Washington on Saturday. The Export of Domestic Produce for the week fell to $1,000,042 against $1,732,739 same week last season—reversing the comparison of the previous week.

The Custom-house returns of trade at this port, published some weeks ago, for eleven months of the current Treasury Year 1859, present an aggregate Import of Foreign Merchandise to the 31st May, ult., of $195,051,000

There was no settled tone to the Railway Share market through the week. Taking New-York Central as the leading speculative the changes were repeated, and the price appeared to be governed each day by the supply or control of the cash certificates, actively employed for Street deliveries, which, of late, bear the relation of only one or two ℔ cent. to the gross capital, or, say from 2,500 to 5,000 shares on the Street to 240,000 shares held by the whole proprietary! The fluctuations were also frequent in two of the Western Stocks, Michigan Central and Michigan Guaranteed, the sales for the decline being unusually bold on Thursday and Friday morning, leading to a reaction on Friday afternoon and Saturday. The other Western Shares and Hudson and Harlem were comparatively steady. Panama is 3½ ℔ cent. higher and in demand, and Pacific Mail improved 1½ ℔ cent. The whole Share market, at the close of the week, was rather firm, though the dealings not very active. The Stock Exchange held no second session on Saturday, in accordance with the usual practice of making that day half a holiday through the hot weather. In State Stocks the dealings ruled in favor of better prices, and there is a further advance of 1 ℔ cent. established in Missouris, and a rise of 2 ℔ cent. in Tennessees. Among the Railway Bonds the mortgages of the Erie Company all recovered somewhat the decline early in the week, the first issue selling at 85, while Illincis Centrals fell back to 83 ℔ cent. from the extreme advance of Saturday week. The Federal Fives continue inactive at 104 ℔ cent.

The Money market was ¼@1 ℔ cent. easier on long date Discounts at the close of the week, owing to the comparatively light offering of strictly prime paper. The selection of 30@60 days' prime acceptances, is also limited. The terms at Bank are 6 to 7 ℔ cent., 30 days to 3 months, and with outside lenders, 7 to 8 ℔ cent. 3 to 6 months. The modification from the somewhat higher pretensions during the previous fortnight while the Specie shipments ran so high, is owing, in a good measure, to the caution with which our first-class merchants enter upon new engagements, rather than to increased facilities at Bank. In proof of this it will probably be seen this afternoon that the Bank Loans have voluntarily run off to the extent of $1,200,000 or $1,500,000 additional to the four millions liquidated the previous fortnight. Demand loans, among the Stock and Money Brokers, range as before, 5 to 6 ℔ cent. There was a good demand for Money in this way on Friday, when 5½@6 ℔ cent. was paid, but on Saturday 5 ℔ cent. was again accepted from the old Brokers. Exchange closed steady for Banking bills 110⅛@110¼ at 60 days' sight and 110⅜@110¾ at sight on London. The 60 day bills are made somewhat preferable again by the improved facility and cheaper terms for discounting them in London.

The foreign news by the Quebec steamer was publicly known in the Street, on Saturday, to the extent of the quotations for Cotton and the English Funds, before 1 o'clock, and the fact that a bloody and unfortunate action in Italy had taken place was in private hands about the same hour, though not made public until 2½ o'clock. The necessity of thus keeping back from the Press, or the bulletin boards of the Press, important telegraphic news for several hours, when the steamer arrives at Quebec, or Halifax, or Cape Race, is not exactly appreciated by the public, nor its fairness, in any sense, or upon any pretext, conceded. We notice the subject once more to call the attention of the Agent of the Associated Press to the signal favor which he would do the business public by anticipating the private dispatches which will occasionally find their way into the Street, or on the Corn or Cotton Exchange, to victimize those who rely upon the Press for the earliest information. We can speak the more timely in the present instance because, fortunately, the War news, on Saturday, failed to do mischief to the market, and, of course, failed to work profit to those who were exclusively in possession of it.

We have received from Mr. ANASTASIUS NICHOLAS, the publisher of a Bank-note Reporter in this City, a categorical denial of the charge, through the Boston Traveller, of attempting to blackmail one of the country banks of New England. It is as follows:

"I state (says Nr. N.) that I have never written that bank, nor have I made any application, directly or indirectly, to the Weare Bank, or any of its officers or agents, for money, for any purpose whatever; neither am I connected with any of the parties named in the article, or connected with them in the publication of any Bank-note Reporter, or in any other business. I simply published in my Bank-note Reporter what I believed to be true, and still so believe."

Mr. NICHOLAS also writes an impertinent note, complaining of a single day's delay in the publication of his "explanation," which we pass over without further notice than to say that we had the best banking authority in this City—backed by a letter from the Suffolk Bank of Boston—for all that we have said or done in the premises.

The Reporter of Mr. NICHOLAS was "named" in the article which we copied, and we now leave the question of veracity between them. We recopy the first paragraph, that there may be no mistake, so far as we are concerned:

From the Boston Traveller.

Some months ago the Weare Bank of Hampton Falls, N. H., were notified that a demand had been made by ANASTASIUS NICHOLAS, of No. 79 Wall-street, New-York City, that $1,000 should be deposited in a designated place in that City, or the Bank would be discredited. This demand was refused, and soon "Nicholas' Reporter" appeared, with an article cautioning the public against bills of the Weare Bank, in language best calculated to damage the institution.

It will be remembered that some months ago every effort of the Minnesota financiers to place the Bonds of that young State, to be issued for Railway purposes, on the New-York market, fell through for want of a substantial basis of credit and informality, if not invalidity of issue. The latter defect was first made known from Minnesota, where the subject had been brought before the Courts, and all subsequent efforts at explanation or remedy failed to induce this market to entertain any part of the $5,000,000 loan, until new legislation is had, and no guards thrown around the security both in respect to taxation upon the people to pay the interest with unfailing regularity, and to the primary acknowledgment of the debt and the manner of its creation by another vote of the people. It was deemed equally important to the safety of the creditor and the good faith and interest of the people that no more Railway negotiation should be imposed upon the market under the guise of a Public Debt of the State. Under these circumstances, we are surprised to learn from the Chicago Press and Tribune that

"Up to this time there have been issued to the railroad companies, as we are informed, State bonds to the value of about $2,000,000. Some of these bonds have been deposited as collateral security for the loan of money at from twenty to twenty-five per cent. of their face. Some of them have been paid over to professional lobby agents, some have been paid to retiring Directors, to get them out of Boards where other men were wanted, and some—about $300,000—have been used as a banking basis at ninety-five cents on the dollar. There is no evidence that a single bond has ever been sold. While bonds of the State of Minnesota issued for other purposes were worth $1 07 in the New-York market, capitalists there refused to touch the new batch loaned to the railroads at any price whatever. If thrown upon Wall-street without reserve there is no probability that they would realize ten cents on the dollar. Yet here is a circulation of nearly $300,000, forming the chief currency of Minnesota, based upon bonds of this character, valued at ninety-five cents on the dollar. It was the intention of the plunderers to issue currency for the whole batch of $5,000,000 bonds as fast as received from the State. In ordinary times perhaps they would have succeeded in doing so; but under the influence of continual financial depression the bubble has burst, sooner than they had expected, and it is to be hoped that the game is not only blocked, but that it will stay blocked."

The Miners' Journal of Saturday says of Coal:

"The quantity sent by railroad this week is 35,653 06—by canal 43,544 03—for the week 79,197 09 tons against 63,775 tons for the corresponding week last year. The published advance in the prices of toll and freights to take effect on the 1st of July, by our transporting Companies, has stimulated the trade to some extent, but prices remain without change. Our table is complete this week from all the Anthracite Regions, except Wyoming South, from which we give the estimate only, but it is nearly correct. The increase in Anthracite so far, sums up 609,360 tons, and we feel confident that the market will take a further increase of from 300,000 to 400,000 tons, which will make the increase amount to about one million tons this year. This is a very heavy increase in a single year, but it must be recollected that in 1857 the supply was diminished 329,000 tons, and in 1858 the increase over 1857 was only 59,800 tons. The growing scarcity of wood, the substitute of coal for wood as fuel in locomotives, together with the extremely low rates at which it has been sold for the last two years, all of which causes have tended to diffuse its use to a much greater extent than heretofore, and hence the increased demand which now exists for this species of fuel."

In regard to the crops in Ohio the Cincinnati Gazette of Friday reports:

"Observations during an absence of three or four days in the country, have impressed us favorably regarding the crop prospects. In the southern portion of Clermont County, to which our trip was chiefly confined, wheat was not injured in the slightest degree by frost, though it was sufficiently severe to cut down the corn. Farmers with whom we conversed, are unanimously of the opinion that the yield of wheat will be better in that section, both as regards quantity and quality, than for several years past. Corn has recovered entirely from the effects of the frost. Fields that looked bare and unpromising on Saturday, presented a thrifty appearance on Wednesday, owing to timely and copious rains which fell at intervals, during Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. This crop promises a heavy yield. Potatoes have also recovered, and are looking very well. Oats are short, and the hay crop will also be largely deficient. Of apples, the yield will be about one-fourth of an average. In other sections of the same county hay and oats promise a larger yield, the Spring having been more favorable. The Clermont farmers were quite as much concerned for the safety of the wheat and corn, after the frost of the 5th, as those of other sections from which discouraging reports were received at first; but they are now well satisfied with the prospects, with the exception of oats and hay. So far as regards wheat and corn, leaving out Northeastern Ohio, the prospects in Clermont, judging from reports received within the last few days, are a fair indication of the condition of the crops of the Middle Western States. With favorable weather hereafter the crop of corn in Ohio and Indiana will be the largest ever grown; and in the aggregate, wheat will be a full average—the heavy yield in some places, with the increased breadth of land occupied generally, making up for the deficiency in the sections where the frost did most injury."

There is more activity in Land Warrants. THOMPSON BROTHERS quote as follows:

	Buying.	Selling.
40 acres, per acre	$1 00	$1 10
80 acres, per acre	85	90
120 acres, per acre	73	76
160 acres, per acre	83	86

The business of the Cleveland and Toledo Railroad for the year ending April 30, 1859, was as follows:

For Passengers	$485.537 45
For Freight, Mails, &c	312.618 20
Total	$987,155 65
Running expenses for the same period	383.699 73
Net earnings	$414,455 92

The earnings are $132,096 81 less than for the preceding year. The net result is equal to 7 ℔ cent. upon the Funded Debt of $3,842,720, and a surplus to the income account of $145,465 or about 4 ℔ cent. in the capital stock.

Real Estate....SATURDAY, JUNE 18.

We resume, and conclude, to-day, our report of the Thwing Estate.

One lot on the northwest corner of Sixty-second-street and Third-avenue, D. B. TAYLOR, $4,600. Two lots adjoining, ROBERT GOELET, $2,850 each. The next, 32 feet 6 inches front, 27 feet 6 inches rear, same, $3,525.

One lot on the northeast corner of Eightieth-street and Tenth-avenue, 26 feet 2 inches by 100 feet, ADON SMITH, $1,260. The next, same, $860.

One lot on the northeast corner of Eighty-first-street and Fourth-avenue, 25 feet 6½ inches by 120 feet, D. THURSTON by F. A. GUION, $1,525. Four lots north side of Eighty-first-street, 350 feet west of Fourth avenue, F. A. GUION, $815 each. Four lots on the south side, directly opposite the above, same, $840 each.

One lot on the northwest corner of Third-avenue and Eighty-fifth-street, 25 feet by 113 feet, GEO. W. WEICH, $5,650. One lot adjoining, same size, same buyer, $3,050. These lots are in the heart of Yorkville, and covered with buildings, renting for $280 and taxes.

One lot on the south side of Ninety-third-street, 398 feet 10½ inches east of Fifth-avenue, $1,350. Next, $1 300. Next, $1,220. Next, $1,200. Together, 102 feet 2½ inches front by 100 feet 8 inches deep. A. C. DAYTON by THEOD. E. TOMLINSON. Also two lots, north side of Ninety-second-street, exactly in rear of the last two abovenamed, same buyer, $1,310 each.

One lot on the south-east corner of Ninety-sixth-street and Third-avenue, N. O'CONNELL, $1,475. Next, three adjoining, A. C. DAYTON as above, $775 each.

One lot opposite, on the north-east corner of the same, 100 feet street and avenue, Thos. HAY, $1,200. The next three adjoining, same, $750 each. Two lots in the rear, northside Ninety-sixth-street, same, $465 each.

The right, title and interest only of the Thwing estate to the whole front west side of Second-avenue, between Ninety-sixth and Ninety-seventh streets, was bought—the Ninety-sixth-street half by CLARKSON CROLIUS, at $35 each lot, and the Ninety-seventh-street half by H. GALPIN, at $30 each. This property is claimed to be owned by ALLEN HAY.

The entire front on the west side of Avenue A between One Hundred and Seventeenth and One Hundred and Eighteenth streets, irregular depth, say 98 feet 1 inch on One Hundred and Seventeenth street, 87 feet 11 inches on One Hundred and Eighteenth-street, and 171 feet deep, near the centre of the block, some old road or lane being in the rear. Counting north, F. A. GUION bought the first three at $575, $580, and $600
